On The Porch.

'Twas too far to walk to meeting, and the horses had to plow,
John won't take them from the furrow for the Fourth-day meeting now.

So I've had to give up going. But I always come out here
To keep the hour of meeting, and to feel the presence near.

I know I'm growing feeble, an' Maria is quite right;
Though I hain't been sick in meeting, yet most any time I might—

So I tidy frock and apron, and put on my sheerest cap,
And sit out on the side porch with the Bible on my lap.

I'll put the hard thoughts from my heart, and in the stillness wait
For the comfort an' the message to all who meditate.

The book falls open at the text, "I will lift up mine eyes
Unto the hills, whence cometh help." Why, that is a surprise!

Why, all the livelong morning I've been thinking of the hills;
I was born an' raised among 'em. How that mock-bird's carol trills!

There was one beside the spring-house when Josiah came to me,
Where I stood a-churning butter, on that day in Tennessee.

His father was a minister—had preached for Friends, First-day,
In Lost Creek meetin' house; an' they had mount' to ride away,

When Josiah, from the stirrup, turned back to get a drink
From the old spring by the dairy, with the moss upon its brink.

I can see his eyes a-twinkle as I held the dripping gourd;
'Thee is like Rebecca at the well. Now, does thee mind the word

"Which Eliezer brought her?" and I felt my hot cheek blush.
It was then the mock-bird's treble broke the early morning hush.

"Will thee come with me, Rebecca?" said Josiah in my ear.
"I've an inward drawing to thee. Will thee be my wife, my dear?"

A "Yes," a kiss, and then he went. We met no more at all
Till the week that we were wedded, at Friends' meeting, in the fall.

Tut, tut! This is foolish! Let me think upon the Word;
Not let my thoughts go drifting off at a carol of a bird.

"I will lift mine eyes unto the hills—" Th' flat country looked strange.
From my father's porch we looked right up to the old Smoky range,

I could see him as he journeyed, up the mountain road they went To attend a Monthly Meeting up to Pine Creek Settlement.

We came 'way out to Ohio while I was yet a bride;
Were living here nigh 40 year, an' then—Josiah died.

"I will lift—mine—eyes—" At evening, when the clouds mass in the west,
They look like the hills of Heaven nigh the City of the Blest—

"Whence cometh help!" I like to think the call will come to me—
Josiah's self the messenger—"Come up; we wait for thee."

Oh, there must be hills in heaven! He will come down from the hights,
And we'll climb up from the valley till we see the heavenly lights.

Ah, the weary years of waiting! But "the time will seem not long"
When we hear the mock bird's carol mingle with the angels, song.

—Alice Williams Brotherton, in Harper's Bazar.

ONE DAY'S RECORD.

It was the first month of a new year, and Otis Grey sat in a London hotel impatiently waiting for a message relative to the departure of his favorite steamer.

He thought little of crossing the ocean, as he was compelled to do so every year. He was never sick; consequently the sea was his place of thinking—his mental mill where he ground and ground the grist of his own fancies or that which his environment furnished.

It suddenly occurred to him that he had not purchased some articles a friend had requested him to obtain in Liverpool. He would go to Liverpool forthwith and await the arrival of the steamer.

Once there, he found it a more attractive city than he had supposed it to be. Like most travelers, he had inspected the docks and then rushed on to London.

After his second visit to St. George's he came down the steps with the air of a man at peace with himself.

In a corner near the gateway he saw an old woman with dirty garments and a basket of apples nearly as wrinkled as herself. He had purchased some fruit of her the day before and she remembered him. The good woman surprised him by saying: "God's blessing on ye, sir—have ye a wife?"

"Yes," was the brief reply.

"And little children, sir?"

"Yes, five of them."

"Then, sir, be pleased to put this in yer pocket, and mind its sayin' when you reach yer great land of America, though I be old and poor."

Mr. Grey took the dirty piece of paper and fumbled in his pockets for a shilling. The old woman refused his charity.

"Not that, yer honor; no gold or silver for that. It's been near my heart this fifty years, an' them as might have minden it are all gone, and I was lookin' for one who would say a kind word to me, which you did o' yesterday. They may laugh at me ef they be minded to, but I had once a home and a kind man and nine children at me table."

"Are they all gone?" asked Mr. Grey.

"All dead, yer honor. Would I be sittin' in the street if one of me own blood was left to me?"

Mr. Gray's sympathetic heart was touched. After much persuasion he induced the old woman to accept a coin, and he went his way with her legacy in his pocket.

As he entered the Adelphia he saw several trunks in the hall bearing the name of a friend. His steamer had just come in, he could hear the very latest news from home. Mr. Grey need not go on board for several hours; his luggage was already cared for and he was at liberty to act as guide to his friend's family, who had left Boston without any definite plan of travel.

He procured maps, marked stations, made out a list of hotels, and named numberless things "to be done without fail." The places to be shunned were marked with an X.

Thus the hours flew until it was time the steamer to sail for America. Mr. Grey found his luggage in his stateroom, and his old friend, the captain, welcomed him with refreshing heartiness.

The third day a storm arose, a storm so severe that the sailors worked until exhausted, and the captain did not leave the bridge for forty-eight hours.

Mr. Grey, being a good sailor, found his way with great difficulty to the saloon. Although it was really midday it seemed like midnight. Mr. Grey splashed through the water on the floor to his corner of the saloon, where he was wont to sit with the captain.

He thought long and earnestly of his family, of his provision for them in case of accident, and of their great joy should he return in safety. He began to see the noble qualities of his wife as he had never done before. What a faithful, good, little mother she was, and how hard she worked to keep her brood well dressed and well behaved, and how small his share of the work had been.

A thousand tender scenes were photographed upon his memory; they had impressed him lightly at the time, but the new background brought them out with powerful distinctness.

"Ah," he said, "I would not be a woman for a million dollars."

Bob, the cabin boy, who was just outside the door trying to rescue some crackers which had fallen from his hand, asked if he was wanted.

"No, Bob, I was thinking aloud."

"Mighty bad storm, sir."

"Pretty rough, Bob, but please heaven we will get in all right, with a staunch ship and a brave captain."

"I hope so, sir; but I never see dis ship in sich a pickle."

"We always use salt brine to make good pickles, Rob."

It was a simple joke, but it sent Rob away with a lighter heart, and Mr. Grey continued his meditations.

"I wonder what Alecia is doing!" he said, as he drew a long, thin case from his inner pocket, and held it up where the rays of the light might fall upon it.

It was a good face, not beautiful as men rate the flesh and blood, but fine, noble and sweet.

"Poor girlie," he said, "five babies and heaps of worries, and yet so full of brightness. What good letters she sends me; not a word of the chafe and fret of her daily life; only the sunny home pictures bereft of all shadows. Dear, brave little woman, if I ever see her again I will make amends for my selfishness."

He folded the case tenderly and was about to put it once more in his pocket when a scrap of paper fell from it.

"Ah, ah," he said, "here is my legacy from the old apple woman of Liverpool; I had quite forgotten it." After many twistings and turnings to accommodate himself to the movements of the ship and the swaying light, he managed to read the following lines:

The first year of the life ye married be,
Thou thinkest of thy wife, and she, of thee;
But the years go by, and as children appear,
Be sure to grow to thy wife more dear.
Let thy words of praise exceed thy blame,
To one who bravely bears thy name;
The trades of a woman are many to do,
And she hath given her all to you;
On thy lips let no harshness ever grow,
For only the Christ hath loved thee so.

"Quaint enough," said Mr. Grey, "to be a sermon preceding her blessing, and odd, indeed, that I should read them now while thinking of Alecia."

All night long the ship creaked and groaned and plunged, and all night long the singular lines repeated themselves as the lonely occupant of stateroom 29 tried in vain to sleep.

He had looked upon himself as a model husband, but honest retrospection and introspection in the midnight darkness and horror of a midocean storm told him a different story.

"The truth is," he said, as the ship gave a desperate plunge beneath a huge wave, "the truth is, we men are constantly adding cares to the heavy burdens our wives must bear. I am no saint, and I detest the weakness which prompts us to make good resolutions only to break them, but henceforth I must be more mindful of Allie's comfort, and less careful about my own. The old apple woman was right; I will cure myself of this carping, critical style, and that shall be my only resolution for the New Year.

Just then a great wave broke over the ship and cries of distress were heard on every hand. It was very doubtful about reaching land, and Mr. Grey, without a word, prepared to meet his fate like a man.

Word came that the steerage passengers were suffering, for the water froze as fast as it fell, and the cabin was soon full of women and little children who were wet and cold.

Mr. Grey spent the remainder of the night in relieving the wants of those less fortunate than himself. It was a fearful night, and morning seemed long delayed. At last it came, and the sun rose upon the sea once more.

Like a sulky child whose temper has burned itself out the ocean showed only a smiling face. The transition was so great the worn-out passengers could scarcely comprehend it, and when the brave captain staggered down from the bridge, too much exhausted to hold the cup of hot coffee prepared for him, a subdued cheer feebly expressed the over-wrought feeling of all on board.

Four days more and the home lights appeared. Mr. Grey felt like a new man when he saw them; and when at last he reached home he wondered how he had ever possessed the hardihood to tell his wife "she was not half as pretty as when he fell in love with her."

Surely this royal woman who had "given her all for him" had never seemed half so gentle, half so lady-like and charming before; and the children, too, how well she managed them, from the eldest down to the baby.

The next morning Mr. Grey resolved to open his account with himself; his temper and tongue should be under arrest.

His first step was taken when he pasted the lines of the old apple women on the fly-leaf of a small blank book; the second, when he called to his aid his daughter Edith, a thoughtful child, who by virtue of her position as the oldest of the family seemed wise beyond her years.

"You must warn me, Edith," said Mr. Grey; "poor mamma has a hard time of it with us all, and you shall by my mentor."

"It will seem rude, papa; why I am only twelve now."

"True, but your eyes have reproached me sometimes when I have been impatient, and one little finger placed on your lips will help me to remember."

So they made their compact and sealed it with a kiss.

The next morning when Mr. Grey arose he found the ground well covered with snow.

"Hello," he said, "true winter weather; what have you been paying the fellow who shovels the walks?"

"Half a dollar," was Mrs. Grey's reply.

"Bless me, child, that is too much; Brown contracted for his last year at thirty cents and his walk is as long as ours."

"True, but I could not do any better; the snow remained until noon the day I was fortunate enough to find this man."

"O, well, women always—" Mr. Grey stopped short; took out his new account book and made a long X on the clean white page, after which he wrote "snow."

"Bless me," he said to himself, "not home a day and finding fault so soon."

At the table Mr. Grey frowned a little when he saw a piece chipped from his plate. Fine china was one of his pet weaknesses, and he congratulated himself upon his great forbearance when he took it without comment.

He quite forgot himself, however, when his wife filled his cup a trifle fuller than usual; he did not see that one hand was used to remove a fish bone from young Otis' plate, while she poured with the other.

"You have certainly forgot the measure, my dear," he said, with a smile, which could not conceal his tone of reproach.

"How stupid!" she said. "But never mind; it is a trifle harder since the children breakfast with us."

Edith's finger went to her lips, and out came the little book. This time Mr. Grey wrote, "X coffee."

"I know I shall not sin again during this meal," he said to himself, just as Mrs. Grey remarked the chops were rather undone, but she could not seem to make the new cook understand the difference between beef and mutton.

"Why not get a new cook?"

"It is very difficult. This the fourth one since you sailed."

"Other women get good cooks; why can't you?"

"I suppose," she said gently, 'that our family is a harder one to cook for. We make bread four times each week, besides all the rest. Perhaps I might manage to be in the kitchen a little more."

Edith's finger had touched her lips before the little book came out and down went X number three with "cook" after it.

"No, my dear," said Mr. Grey with great earnestness, "you will do nothing of the sort. Mush and milk would be preferable. I cannot have you wearing yourself out for our comfort."

A bright flush came to the little woman's cheeks, and a cheerful smile showed itself as she spread the third slice of bread for young Otis and cut up a chop for Annie, her own breakfast as yet being untasted. Mr. Grey saw it all and uttered a little forcible word concerning his own stupidity.

In less than five minutes he checked himself as he was about to say that his wife was less careful of the children's table manners than she had been with Edith, but a mathematical hinge in his brain led him to remember the difference between five and one.

He certainly was improving. Had he not checked himself several times? He started down town quite in love with himself.

It was very pleasant at the office; everyone was glad to see the junior partner back, and matters had gone on swimmingly.

At the noonday dinner, which Mr. Grey insisted upon for hygienic reasons, the children were, if possible, happier than ever. The soup was good, the roast excellent and the vegetables done to a turn.

Suddenly Ned overturned a glass of water and his mother was informed "that such tumblers were not fit for children, and he was surprised that she gave them drinking glasses calculated for their elders."

So the day wore on and Mr. Grey went to the library at night while his wife went to the nursery and spent two hours in putting little heads on plump pillows and making matters ready for the morning. Mr. Grey meditated.

When his wife crept softly down stairs lest Roy should know she had left him, she found Mr. Grey looking over a tiny book. The first page was covered with mysterious characters.

The woman who looked down upon them was tired from the crown of her shapely head to the tips of her toes, but her first thought was for him.

"Your list of duties for to-day?" she asked; "it must have been so hard for you; I have thought of you many times and have tried to keep the children quiet while you were in the house, but they are nearly irrepressible, and I am not quite willing to become an animated 'don't' in their eyes.

Mr. Grey was more conscience stricken than ever.

"I must tell you the story, Allie, and read you this shameful record, after which you may forgive me, although I do not pretend to deserve it."

He told her of the old apple woman in Liverpool, of the storm at sea, of his one resolution and his experience for just one day.

It was not a long list which he read aloud, but it stood as follows. The listening woman heard him with surprise:—

X Snow—price paid.
X Coffee—full cup.
X Cook—careless.
X Steps—untidy.
X Water—spilled.
X Table manners of children.
X Rolls—too brown.
X Gas—too much burned.
X Window shades—uneven.
X Furnace—badly managed.
X Newspapers—never where wanted.
X Milk bill—preposterously large.
X Wife's hair—new style unbecoming.
X Cane broken by children.
X Footrest broken, other people had things in order.

"There, little woman, that is an honest record as far as I know, but I dare not tell you the number of times I was checked in season. When I think of all the years I have tried you with needless comment on trifling matters, I wonder that you tolerate me."

And she, gentle, loving and forgiving, knew that their lives would be richer and fuller for this confession.—Kate Tannatt Woods, in Buffalo News.

A SENTIMENTAL GIRL.

"You keep rings here, don't you?" he asked in a Woodward avenue jewelry store.

"Certainly," replied the clerk. "Something for yourself?"

"No; I'm thinkin' of gittin sunthin' for my girl. Got anything for about two dollars?"

"Yes, I can give you a plain ring at that price. Here is something very neat."

"I guess that would fit her all right. Kin I have sunthin' engraved on it?"

"Of course—what is it?"

"Wall, I want you to put on it: 'From Thomas J. to Helen H., who is not only the best-lookin' but the smartest girl in the state of Michigan. My love will never, never grow cold, and should death overtake me my last thought would be of you. Be good and you'll be happy, and please accept this as a token of love.' That's what I want you to put on."

"Good gracious, but you can't get all that on a ring!" exclaimned the clerk.

"Must have it on or I don't want a ring!" was the firm reply.

"But the usual way is simply to engrave, 'T.' to H.', with the date after it."

"The usual way may be all right with some girls, but it won't work with mine. What she wants is sentiment—heaps of sentiment. So you can't get it on?"

"Couldn't possibly do it. You'd want a surface as large as your hand to get that all on."

"Say!" exclaimed the young man, after a moment of reflection, "I have it! I'll buy her a silver belt buckle instead of a ring, and I'll have 'em put on all I said, and add to it: 'You are never absent from my thoughts, and a vision of your dear face rises up before me a thousand times a day. Be true—be true! Virtue is its own reward, and your mother kin live with us after we are married. No more at present—good-by!'"—Detroit Free Press.

"They say that Cholly has lost his mind." "Is that so? Does he know it?"—Boston Courier.

"The Rain-Ghost."

"Are you a monarch of pity, dear?"
I asked of the tender rain,
As a few drops fell from the ashen sky
On the thirsty, scorching plain.
"Are you the monarch of mercy, dear,
And love you this parched land?"
But the patter ceased ere I had spoken—
And I did not understand.

When lo! with a mighty swirl it broke,
And a thun'drous gust swept down,
Till the far-off hills looked wan and worn
'Neath the blaze of the lightning crown.
"Oh! monarch of wrath—of wrath"—I cried,
"Would your hatred strike us prone?"
Lo! again I found that while I spoke
The thund'ring rain had gone.

And then for a-long, long while I slept,
Till the world grew cold and gray;
I open'd my shutters wide apart
To lean in the darkened day.
A sad, sad wind from the east blew up,
Like a breath of vanish'd pain,
And its soft touch woke my startled soul
To the weeping of the rain.
'Are you the tears of the past?" I said,
In a whisper dim with awe,
For it seemed that through the heavy clouds
A crown of thorns I saw;
A crown of thorns and a bleeding face,
The price of a ransom gained.
"Are you the ghost of the sins of men?"

And it rained—and rained—and rained!

SHE HELD THE FORT.

There were brave girls among the early French colonists of Canada. The following striking instance is related of a mere child defending a fort seven days against assaulting savages:

One October morning in 1692, the inhabitants of Vercheres, a settlement twenty miles below Montreal, were in the field at work. There were but two soldiers within the fort. The commander and his wife were absent. Their daughter, Madeleine, a girl of fourteen, stood on the landing with a hired man, when she heard firing.

"Run, mademoiselle! run!" cried the man. "Here come the Iroquois!"

Looking around, the girl saw the Indians near at hand. She ran for the fort, and the Indians, seeing they could not catch her, fired at her. The bullets whistled round her, and "made the time seem very long," as she afterwards said.

As soon as she neared the fort she cried out, "To arms! to arms!" hoping that she would get assistance. But the two soldiers were so frightened that they had hidden in the block-house.

When Madeleine reached the gate of the fort she found two women there crying for their husbands who were in the fields and had just been killed. Madeleine forced them in and shut the gate. She instantly went to examine the defences of the fort, and found that some of the palisades had fallen down, leaving holes through which the enemy could easily enter.

She got what help she could and set them up. Then the little commander repaired to the block-house, where she found the brave garrison of two, one man hiding in a corner, and the other with a lighted match in his hand.

"What are you going to do with that match?" said Madeleine.

"Light the powder and blow us all up," answered the soldier.

"You are a miserable coward!" said the girl. "Go out of this place!"

People are always likely to obey in time of panic the one person who shows resolution and coolness. The soldier did as Madeleine bade him. She then flung aside her bonnet, put on a hat and took a gun.

Her whole "force" consisted of the abovementioned soldiers, her two little brothers, aged ten and twelve, and an old man of eighty, and some women and children, who did nothing but set up a continual screaming, as soon as the firing commenced.

"Let us fight to the death," said brave Madeleine to her little brothers, who seemed to have possessed no small share of her own courage. "We are fighting for our country and our religion. Remember our father has told you that gentlemen are born to shed their blood for the service of God and the king."

Madeleine now placed her brothers and the soldiers at the loop-holes, where they fired at the Indians lurking and dodging about outside. The savages did not know how large the garrison was, and therefore hesitated to attack the fort, and numbers of them fell before the well-directed shots of the soldiers.

The girl-commander succeeded, after a while, in stopping the screaming of the women and children, for she was determined that the enemy should perceive no sign of fear or weakness; she flew from bastion to bastion to see that every defender was doing his duty; she caused a cannon to be fired from time to time, partly to intimidate the savages, and partly in hope that the noise might convey intelligence of the situation, and bring them help.

Thus the fight went on, day after day, night after night, the heroic girl keeping up her vigilant exertions so constantly that it was forty-eight hours before she caught a wink of sleep.

For the whole week Madeleine held the fort, with no favoring circumstances but the stormy weather, which prevented the Indians from setting fire to her wooded defences. At the end of that time reinforcements came down the river and "raised the seige."

HAPPINESS ENOUGH.

The small boy was in love. Not that he called it by any such grown-up term, but the elders of the family recognized the symptoms as unmistakable. He had come home one day from school full of the charms of a small maiden whose curls—so said the small boy—had bobbed up and down when she played "chaser" just like long, yellow shavings. After this any mention of the small maiden caused the boy to blush a fiery red under his freckles. He also fell into a Mary's little lamb sort of habit of lingering about after school hours until the small maiden did appear, which made him unconsciously late in arriving home.

One afternoon he didn't come home at all. At last after supper he came in, his face wreathed in smiles. Was he so very late? Why, he had just stayed after school to play "chaser" with the small maiden, and such fun as they had had. He had watched her bobbing curls to his heart's content and they had raced and run all about the school yard and the neighboring block until they were thoroughly tired out. "And what did you do then?" asked the small boy's mother. "Oh, then," replied the small boy, his freckles fairly blotted out beneath his blushes, while his eyes beamed ecstatically, "then we leaned up against the same board fence."—New York Evening Sun.

"Rome," announced the imperial messenger, "is burning."

The Emperor Nero evinced interest.

"The conflagration is general," continued the officer, whereat the monarch raised himself on his elbow.

There was a period of silence.

"The populace," ventured the herald, finally, "is making for the open country."

The master of the world rose to his feet.

"In that event," he said, "you may bring me my fiddle. I will practise the concerto for the E string, which came near getting me impeached, you remember."—Detroit Tribune.

PALMER NEWS.

MOUNT BUNYAN'S SKELETON.

A Grewsome Find, and How it Disappeared Before the Medical Examiner Got There.

One day last July a colored boy came to Medical Examiner Holbrook with a story that he had, in wandering about the steep sides of Mt. Bunyan, stumbled across the bones of a human body concealed in a wash boiler in a somewhat inaccessible part of the mountain. He was questioned closely about the matter, but stuck to his story, affirming that he could not be mistaken. A visit to the spot was made and a kettle was found, with some bones, but they were most assuredly not of human origin, though they might have at one time formed part of the anatomy of a sheep. Dr. Holbrook was naturally somewhat inclined to wrath, and the boy came in for a good share of blame in not knowing the bones of a sheep from those of a human.

There had been a human skeleton there, however, and the boy was right in his report. The story of the circumstances which led the medical examiner on a wild-goose chase up the steep side of Mt. Bunyan on a hot July day has just been made known. It seems that a medical student who was in town at that time had become possessed of a body which he had dissected at the medical school, and wished to preserve the skeleton. Acquainting a friend, engaged in similar studies, with his possessions and plans, they repaired to Mount Bunyan, and after giving the bones a boiling in an old wash boiler, left them there to bleach, intending to return later and give them another boiling. Otis Wallace, a colored lad of about 16 years, in roaming over the mountain, stumbled upon the boiler and contents. He informed his mother, who sent him at once to Medical Examiner Holbrook. He was not at home, and it was about an hour before he returned. Young Wallace waited for him, meanwhile telling his story to several persons. Some friends of the students, who were acquainted with their secrets, overheard the story, and at once started off to inform them of the state of affairs. They had barely time to hustle up on the mountain, remove the boiler and contents and substitute an old kettle and other bones, when the searching party arrived, to find that the skeleton had vanished.

This brings to mind the story of another skeleton, which for a short time caused rumors of possible foul play and midnight assassination. A few years ago a student of anatomy had procured from a medical college the bones of a body which had recently been dissected, and wishing to bleach them spread them out on the flat roof of a Palmer business block. Some men engaged in repairing the roof of an adjoining building saw them and, aghast at the thought of the awful things which might have happened, spread the story that someone had been murdered, or worse, but an investigation soon proved that everything was all right, though the owner of the skeleton was advised to take it in out of sight and bleach it in some other place, which he did.

Death of Dea. George Brown.

The subject of this sketch was the son of Dea. Dauphin and Abby B. (Nutting) Brown, and was born Jan. 27th, 1833, in Richland, Mich. His father was a native of Brimfield, and the son of Dea. Samuel Brown, whose grandfather Jonathan came to Brimfield from Salem in 1739. When a mere lad, Dea. Brown was afflicted with blindness, and hoping to improve his condition his parents came back to Brimfield and were soon gratified by his restored vision. He lived with his father on the farm, receiving his education at the Quaboag Seminary of Warren. At the age of 21 he went to Boston as a clerk in the provision store of Samuel Allen on Congress street, where he remained some ten years. He then purchased a milk route in the city, which he held about a year, then came to Warren and took charge of the cheese factory there in 1866, it being the first of the kind established in Worcester county. He conducted the business successfully for several years, and then removed to Palmer to engage in conducting the newly established bakery with his brother. Retiring from the bakery some years later he found employment in the Palmer Market on Commercial street until failing health caused him to retire from active work. He was married in 1866 to Miss Sarah Worthing, who died some years ago leaving two daughters, Mrs. Fred R. Sistare of Springfield and Mrs. Lena M. Hall of Providence, who survive their father. Dea. Brown spent his last days with his daughter in Springfield, where he died on Monday. The funeral services were held at the Second Congregational church in this village on Wednesday, Rev. F. E. Jenkins officiating. Dea. Brown became a member of the Congregational church of Palmer in 1872, and was elected one of its deacons in 1883, in which capacity he served for some seven years until his removal from town. He was a man of quiet and unassuming manner, possesssed of a truly Christian and devotional spirit, which became the abiding characteristic of his life. And when we have said that he was loyal to his kind, his church and Divine Master, what nobler panegyric could we pronounce over his grave?

P. Lynch the Most Popular Fireman.

The voting contest for the most popular fireman, which has been going on for the past month at W. E. Stone's store, ended at 9 o'clock Wednesday evening, and resulted in a victory for P. Lynch, who by a curious happening had just 1000 votes. M. J. Dawson was second with 870 votes, and T. J. Conroy third with 742. The contest has been somewhat exciting for the past week, and the friends of the leaders have worked hard to have their favorites win. Wednesday morning the votes were counted, and at that time announced; every vote received after that until the time for the closing of the contest was placed in an iron safe through a slit in the top, so that no one could have the least idea how the score stood. Every dime of cash sales was good for one vote, and the store did a thriving trade that evening. The result was as follows, only those having more than 100 votes being given:

Patrick Lynch,	1000
M. J. Dawson,	870
T. J. Conroy,	742
T. H. Dwyer (Ware River R. R.)	458
J. B. Longwill,	296
John Lyman,	200
Dennis Connors,	166
Adelbert Maxwell,	162
George Burdick,	143
Frank Roach,	118
Chas. McManamy,	113
Thos. Boyle,	107
F. A. Paro,	103

Death of Conductor Hastings.

William Hastings, 75, well known as a conductor on the New London Northern road for years, died at his home in Amherst on Thursday evening of last week. He had been in feeble health for years. Thursday evening he had been talking with his daughter, when he suddenly threw up his hands and expired almost immediately. His service with the New London Northern road began when the road was built through to Amherst, he being made station agent. Later he went on the road as a passenger conductor, and was a great favorite with the traveling public. After 35 years of service, in 1890 he, with two other long-time employes of the road, was dismissed on account of age, an action which Mr. Hastings felt keenly, after so many years of faithful service. Since that time he has lived quietly at his home.

A reader asks other readers of the JOURNAL if this is leap year, alleging that although most years whose figures are divisible by 4 are leap years, not all are, and that 1896 is one of the exceptions. The same reader also calls attention to the fact that two full moons in one month are an unusual occurrence, and that there were two in December.

There is sorrow in the home of C. F. Grosvenor over the demise of Timothy, the feline member of the household, who departed this life Monday night, full of years and good works. For 16 years he had been the family pet. Prior to his removal to Palmer a few years ago he displayed a great penchant for snakes, catching and killing many of them, but his appetite grew more dainty in later years, and nothing but kidney would tempt him.

The police last Saturday evening raided the small house on the Gamwell farm, above the carpet mill, which for a few weeks has borne a somewhat unsavory reputation, but failed to find the persons whom they had good reasons to suppose were quartered there. The proprietor of the place informed the officers that he expected them, and so the failure of the raid was explained. The specialties are said to be unusually good.

Friends of Mrs. Laura Childs will be pained to learn that she suffered a slight paralytic shock in Springfield on Sunday, but will be glad that she is recovering, and that it is probably nothing serious. Mrs. Childs had gone to church, and was noticed to be looking sick during the singing of a hymn by a friend in the next seat. She was asked if she was sick, and nodded her head, her lips moving at the same time, though no words were heard. She remained until the service was over, when she was assisted to her home and a physician summoned. The trouble is facial only, and it is thought that she will recover soon.

Hiram P. Gerald, the defaulting treasurer of the Brookfield Savings Bank, took the 6.06 train west on the Boston and Albany road at this place Sunday night. He drove to the Weeks House stable and left his horse, with instructions that it would be called for. He had no baggage, with the exception of a roll about two and a half feet long and five or six inches thick, done up in heavy wrapping paper and tied with a stout cord, which he carried with him when he took the train. George W. Johnson, the receiver of the bank, has filed an attachment of $2000 against George W. Ely and Harriet N. Joslyn, both of Palmer, in an action of contract, and Frank F. Marcy of Palmer has sued Gerald for $500 in an action of contract.

The annual meeting of the Congregational church was held in the vestry last evening. At 6 o'clock there was a supper at which about 100 were present. District Court.

William H. Brewster of Brimfield was arraigned for drunkenness on Monday, and probated until the 25th of this month. William Post of Peterboro, N. H., was fined $5 for drunkenness.

On Tuesday Henry Miller of Philadelphia was sent to the state farm at Bridgewater for a year, the charge being vagrancy. Miller was a six-foot-three negro who looked strong enough to give Corbett points; he lodged at the expense of the town the night before, and when sent to breaking stone in the morning set his face toward the city of beans and culture and meandered. Officer Studley overtook him at the Cooley crossing, and would probably have returned without him but for the assistance of two men and a dog. Miller complained that the place where he stopped the night before was not fit for a human being to sleep in, and suggested to the officer, when the handcuffs were placed on his wrists that "I's a human bein', same as you." He thought Massachusetts somewhat different from the City of Brotherly Love, and complained that "A yeah's pretty hahd, yo' honah; pretty hahd; but as long as I's in dis state I s'pose I'll have to stan' it," in the latter part of which his opinion coincided with that of His Honor.

Wednesday morning John F. McAuley of Worcester was sent to the house of correction for two months for having been drunk.

Yesterday morning Joseph Flagg of West Brookfield paid $5 for drunkenness.

Mr. Ferrill was holding his rifle in an upright position while a friend was cleaning the inside of the barrel with a rod, when the rod slipped and was jammed with great force through the fleshy part of Mr. Ferrill's right hand. The injury confined him to his room for several days.

The Young Men's Club, which was organized in this place last week, seems to be in a prospering condition. Already about 35 members have been enrolled. The club will hold its first business meeting this evening in the building recently occupied by the bicycle club, which they have leased and intend to furnish with an assortment of gymnastic apparatus. This village has long felt the need of such a club, and it is hoped that this one will be a success.

The whist party which was held at the home of Charles Ruggles on New Year's Eve was a decided success. A large number were present, and all enjoyed a pleasant evening. Soon after 12 quite a number of the young ladies bethought themselves that it was leap year, and insisted upon escorting members of the opposite sex to their homes without further delay, much to the embarrassment of several modest young men, who absconded with great haste.

A well-known young man of this place added a little circumstance to his long list of varied experiences last Monday. While in the mill he attempted to "navigate" an elevator in order to reach a lower floor with as little labor as possible. After standing on the false floor beneath the elevator he proceeded to start the machine, which came down and rested itself not lightly on his shoulders. He describes the sensation which he experienced as somewhat peculiar. However, with the help of a man who stood near he was soon able to extricate himself from his precarious condition, and went his way resolved to use the stairway and the supple members with which nature has provided him in his future business in the mill.

Sullivan; R. S., P. H. McKeligett; S. W., William Murphy; J. W., David Gregware; S. B., M. Coffey; J. B., F. B. Edwards; trustee for three years, D. J. Sullivan.

The parents of the Longtine girl whom C. F. Mooers was charged with assaulting with a whip, claim that the case was not fairly stated in last week's paper. They claim she had no switch and made no attempt to strike the 'bus or its occupants, and that the blow on her neck was a severe one, the marks of which she will always carry. They state that Mr. Mooers was sent a note requesting him to apologize, in which event nothing more would have been done about the matter, but that he declined, hence the complaint in court.

The concert and ball given under the auspices of the Young Men's Union on New Year's Eve was a decided success in every particular. The grand march was led by C. L. McCarthy and Miss Maggie Longtine, and about 80 couples participated. Prof. Kelley of Springfield gave perfect satisfaction, and his changes were new and pretty. The Philharmonic orchestra furnished music for the concert and dance. Those present seemed to enjoy the occasion much, and there were many from the surrounding towns and villages. The club are to be congratulated upon their first event, which was a most successful one.

The "white" schoolhouse was entered last week by a party of young lads, who secured entrance through an unlocked window, and some of the toys and smaller articles taken from the primary department room, besides which things were pretty much mixed up. Sunday another lad entered by the same window and abstracted a pair of skates which had been left there. He was confronted on Tuesday by Superintendent Small and Mr. Hobbs of the school committee with the question of what he was doing in the building. He at first denied all connection with the matter, but on the threat of having an officer called owned up and returned the skates. All parties implicated in the matter have been pretty well scared, and if no further trouble of the kind occurs there will probably be no arrests.

A Pleasant Gathering.

Mr. and Mrs. N. W. Bond of this place celebrated their 17th anniversary of married life on New Year's day at their pleasant residence, "Shady Lawn," by giving a family dinner party, sixteen sitting down to a table loaded with all that could be desired to tickle the palate of the most fastidious. Among the guests were Mr. and Mrs. Warren Bond of Bondsville, father and mother of Mrs. Bond, Mr. and Mrs. L. E. Bixby of this place, father and mother of Mrs. Bond from Hartford, Mrs. Huldah Morse, sister of Mrs. Bixby, Mr. J. Henry Goodrich, Miss Etta H. Rancore, Mr. and Mrs. Robert H. Burton and their three children, Robert H., Jr., Mildred M. and Florence E., and Master Henry Hobbs of this place. The afternoon and evening were pleasantly passed, vocal and instrumental music, games, etc., being in order. Mrs. Burton, who is first soprano in the choir of St. Thomas's church at Hartford, rendered several solos, and also sang with Mr. Goodrich, tenor, in duets. Mr. and Mrs. Bond received several beautiful presents as reminders of the happy occasion, including a set of silver fruit knives, a foot rest, picture, and some exquisite cut flowers, roses and carnations. The party broke up at a late hour, wishing Mr. and Mrs. Bond many happy returns of the day. The Hartford party remained over night and dined on Thursday with Mr. and Mrs. Bixby, Mr. and Mrs. Timothy D. Potter of Springfield being invited to join the party, as they were not able because of a previous engagement to be present on New Year's day. Mr. and Mrs. Bond and three children, Harry Arthur and Ettie, were included in the jolly party that gathered around Mr. Bixby's table, and after two days of pleasant intercourse this happy family party broke up, hoping that they may meet again in many such gatherings in the future.

LEGISLATIVE MATTERS.

BOSTON, Jan. 1, 1896.

The organization of the Legislature occurred on Wednesday, and the feature of general interest and highest importance was the defeat of Clerk McLaughlin for reëlection after holding the office for 13 years. The result was a surprise to the clerk and to all of his friends, including Speaker Meyer, who felt confident of his reëlection. The question was settled by a caucus of the Republicans in the old hall of the House on Wednesday forenoon. The battle was opened by Mr. Boutwell of Malden, of last year's House, who pronounced in favor of a Republican clerk, notwithstanding the acknowledged superior qualifications of Mr. McLaughlin. Several sharp speeches were on each side. In favor of a Republican clerk it was said that if the Democrats had the opportunity they would not suffer a Republican clerk to remain in the office. It was admitted on the part of the opponents of the clerk that he was thoroughly equipped for the service, and that he had been accommodating to all members. On the other hand, it was presented purely as a question of business, common sense and good party policy to nominate for the place a man who would give the state the best possible service, regardless of his party connections.

But the opponents of the clerk had their way, for the vote stood 89 for Mr. Sleeper of Winthrop, when only 85 were necessary to nominate, 76 for Clerk McLaughlin and 4 for James W. Kimball of Lynn, the assistant clerk. But when the election came up in the House occurred the most interest. Mr. McCarthy of Boston took the floor and said that if it were simply the question of changing one man for another he would probably have nothing to say, but this change was the outcome of a sentiment which was not the sentiment of a majority of the Republican party. It was the sentiment which was felt in the last Republican state convention, when about 400 of the delegates voted for a candidate who was not avowedly a candidate and against the present honorable governor of the state. This sentiment was not in accord with the principles of the Republican party, which had stood for equal rights and privileges, and on that platform had governed the country for about 30 years. He told of the action of this element in his own district, (meaning the A. P. A.) saying that he was the unanimous choice of the Republican caucus and yet this element had an independent Republican candidate against him at the polls. He protested against the nomination of the caucus on the basis that it was not in accord with Republican principles, and declared that he should support his protest by his vote.

Then Mr. J. H. Mellen of Worcester, recognizing the futility of Democratic opposition, yet hoping to do something to save his friend, said that he hoped the session would not begin with a partisan spirit which would embroil the session from the first day to the last and make the filling of the offices a grab for spoils. He reminded the Republicans of the practice of the Democrats in Boston for many years, though they had full control in the city hall, of retaining in office competent and experienced men, though they were Republicans, such as the treasurer and city auditor, and others whom he mentioned. He hoped that the members would wait to hear the sober judgment of the Republican party and get the voice of the press, for he felt sure that it would not indorse the action of the caucus. To test the sense of the House, he moved that the matter go over to the next day.

This brought up a new complication. It would delay the organization and the inauguration, for the governor cannot be inaugurated till the Legislature is organized. It seemed, however, to be in order to make the motion, for Speaker Meyer, after consulting his book and Clerk McLaughlin, put the motion before the House. Then Mr. Mellen, saying that he acted by the request of Clerk McLaughlin, withdrew the motion. So it seems that the clerk, rather than delay the organization by a dispute over the office, took himself out of the way, though the vote seems to prove that, if the delay had been secured, he would have been reëlected. The ballot was ordered and out of 117 votes necessary to elect Mr. McLaughlin had 108 and Mr. Sleeper had 122, with a few scattering. As there are only 56 Democrats in the House, and 232 members voted, there must have been about 50 Republicans who deliberately bolted the caucus rather than abide by its instructions. When a motion was made in the caucus to make the election unanimous Rev. John Rogers Thurston of Northbridge voted no.

The mischief has been done and it remains to be seen what will be the consequences of it. The case is a strong one, and it will not be strange if it is repeated all over the country to the injury of the Republican party. The clerk was admitted by the men who opposed him to be thoroughly efficient, honest and accommodating. The place was demanded for a Republican solely on the ground that a Democrat ought not to fill an office in a Republican House. There was no provocation on the part of the Democrats, only an assertion of what the Democrats would have done if they had been in the place of the Republicans. Of course this will embitter the Democrats where they have power to retaliate, and it is to be expected that the Republican office-holders in Boston will now have to go, no matter how good they are, and thus both state and city will be the losers.

A further aspect of the matter is its bearing on the power of the A. P. A. element in the Republican party. Clerk McLaughlin is an Irish Catholic Democrat, and the opposition to him has been busy for two years on lines very much the same as those of the secret order. Against the protest of the leading members of the House, he has been defeated. This shows the power of the order in the party and brings to the front the question whether they will capture the Republican state convention for the nomination of Congressman Morse, or some other candidate of their choosing. It presents a serious question for the friends of Lieut. Gov. Wolcott, and complicates the situation from this time on. It is said that there are 73 members of the secret order in the House. They thus become a material element for the party to reckon with, and this event will make the party leaders all the more watchful. There is good reason for saying that the Republican state committee regrets the defeat of Mr. McLaughlin.

The other events of the opening of the Legislature were just as expected. Senator Lawrence of North Adams was elected president of the Senate, and Speaker Meyer was reëlected speaker by a unanimous vote, notwithstanding the vote of the caucus in the morning showing that the Republicans had determined to defeat the Democratic clerk. There were the usual exhortations to faithful work and a short session, which will be observed if they can be with due regard to the public business.

There will be a great deal of legislation of the highest importance. Large appropriations will be asked for by many petitioners who want to get at the state treasury, and it will be a good year in which to practice economy. There has been some strong partisan talk, this being a presidential year, and there is evident danger that the good of the public will be sacrificed for the sake of making party capital. If the people of the districts have any influence with their representatives, they ought to see that they look out for the public first of all.

Holden agency of Palmer, and will soon occupy the hotel, which has been run so successfully by Mrs. and Mr. Foley, who have many friends in Monson and elsewhere, as they are noted for their ability to entertain and provide for the wants of the people who have occasion to enter their home.

The annual meeting of the Congregational church was held yesterday afternoon and evening. After supper reports of the various officers of the church were listened to. Edward F. Morris, for ten years superintendent of the Sunday school, presented an interesting report. Mr. Morris was most unwilling to be reëlected, but was finally prevailed upon to take the office another year. Owing to the lateness of the hour the meeting adjourned until next Thursday evening, when the remaining officers will be elected.

Representative Charles W. King of the 9th Hampden district left Tuesday night for Boston, to be present at the opening of the session of the General court, and has the best wishes of his many friends for a pleasant and successful season. Mr. King's home has always been in Monson, and he is popular with all classes. For eight years he has been employed in the office of R. M. & T. Reynolds; he is the treasurer of the Universalist church and the president of the Windsor Club. He is a member of the republican town committee and of the district committee, and is one of the rising young men of the town.

A matter which is of interest to the merchants and business men, as well as the community at large, is that of the closing of places of business on special occasions. It sometimes happens that very short notice is given, and this often causes inconvenience both to the business man and the customer or employes. In view of this it has been suggested that a meeting of the business men might be called and a committee from among them chosen to look after the matter, and the plan of proceedure be something after this fashion: If for any reason a person wishes business shut down for a specified time let him apply to a member of the committee, who will at once confer with the business men.

The following officers were elected at the annual meeting of the Congregational church, held Tuesday evening: Clerk and treasurer, Henry S. Howe; auditing committee, Charles H. Walker, Frank E. Gleason and Joseph G. Hastings. Charles H. Walker was elected deacon for a term of four years. The prudential committee is: Rev. H. G. Hale, William P. Robbins, Frank E. Gleason, Warren D. Hosley, Charles H. Walker, J. W. Chadsey, Charles F. Goodrich, Jesse T. Leonard, Mrs. L. E. Demond and Mrs. J. W. Hastings. The church has added 53 to its membership the past year, and the present membership is 319. The envelope system of weekly offering is used, and the total benevolences the past year was $2162, which is an increase of nearly $400 over the previous year.

Monson showed that she appreciated the honor of having so great a man as Evangelist D. L. Moody in her midst on Monday afternoon and evening by packing the Congregational church at the two meetings. There were a number of out-of-town people present, including Rev. F. E. Jenkins and Rev. Herbert F. Moulton of Palmer, and Rev. Mr. Butler of Three Rivers. Mr. Moody spoke in the afternoon upon "The Holy Spirit," and upon the work of placing religious literature in the prisons of our country. In the evening the stores were all closed in order that everyone might attend the service. Mr. Moody again spoke upon the literature for prisons, and took for his text, "Be not deceived; God is not mocked: for whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap." He dwelt especially upon these four points: A man expects to reap what he sows; he expects to reap the same kind that he sows; he expects to reap more than he sows, and he is not ignorant of what he sows. Mr. Moody was assisted in the afternoon and evening services by Revs. Mr. Jenkins, Marble, Hatch and Butler. The praise service in the evening was led by Arthur D. Noreross, Prof. J. S. R. Coy presiding at the organ.

The week of prayer at the Congregational church will begin Sunday. The motto chosen for the church for the year is, "Continue ye in my love," and as it is the custom to listen on New Year's Sunday to a sermon upon the annual motto, Rev. F. S. Hatch will take for his subject, "Love and continuance." The sermon will be followed by the sacrament. Topics for the meetings are as follows: "The Holy Spirit Inciting to Prayer, Confession and Thanksgiving;" Mondey evening, "The Holy Spirit as Interpreter in the Study of the Bible;" Tuesday evening, "The Holy Spirit as Guide and Helper in the School and in the Home;" Wednesday evening, "The Holy Spirit Revealing a Saviour to the World;" Thursday evening, "The Baptism of the Spirit Affording an Equipment for Service;" Friday evening, 'The Holy Spirit Entreating for the Extension of the Kingdom;" Saturday afternoon, "The Spirit of God Pervading Business, Society and the Nation." Communion will be observed at the Methodist church Sunday morning. Rev. W. H. Marble will preach in the evening, taking for his subject, "Gratitude and Hopefulness." There will be meetings in this church from Tuesday to Friday evenings inclusive, with no topics assigned. On Sunday morning fourteen persons will be taken into the church, some of them on pro bation and the rest into full membership. A class will be baptized.

Miss Florence Green, who has been spending the holidays in New York, returned home Monday.

The Sunday schools in both churches had Christmas trees and a concert in the Congregational church Sunday evening.

Miss Mary Howard, who has been spending the holidays in Milford, Boston and Providence, returned home Saturday.

Mr. and Mrs. Lyman Fisk gave a very enjoyable whist party in honor of their son Eugene, of Chicago, on New Year's Eve. Each guest was presented with a cup and saucer as a souvenir.

Miss Gregg, teacher in No. 3, spent Christmas at her home in Brattleboro, Vt. Upon her return teacher and pupils had a Christmas tree, and among other gifts the pupils presented their teacher with a silver thimble.

Miss Fannie and Mr. Charles Merrick gave a party to a large number of their friends in honor of their guest, Miss Cheney, teacher in Milton high school, Friday evening. The house was beautifully decorated with Christmas greens.

The winter term at the Academy began yesterday. The district schools opened Monday. Miss Dora M. Merrick, who has taught in district No. 4, was obliged to give up her position on account of sickness, and Miss Kelley of Washington has been chosen to fill the vacancy.

The young men of Rev. G. W. Davis's Bible class made him a visit Tuesday evening and left a purse of about $20 for a New Year's present.

The wind this week did considerable damage. A portion of the belfrey of the old Baptist church was blown off; H. A. McFarland's barn on the Welsh place was blown down, the roof was taken several rods away, and the slates on his house were torn off to quite an extent and carried 25 feet away. Several families claim that their homes were shaken so as to wake them out of a sound sleep, and many arose and dressed because of fear of being blown away.

The Bohemian glass blowers managed to blow several hundred dollars out of the pockets of the people last week. The prizes consisted of glass globes and small pieces of glassware. They awarded prizes as follows: To the best dancer of the young ladies, Miss Emma Gunther; handsomest lady, Miss Katie Moran; homliest man, Dr. E. F. Ross; handsomest baby, Lena Bailey; the scholar who made the most words out of the letters in the word Bohemian was Richard Kennedy, who got 166 correct words. All of the prizes were glass goods, some of which were very pretty. Of course there are various opinions about the judgment in awarding prizes; it is a difficult task to decide when there are so many fine looking ladies and babies as there are in Wales; decide as one would, many handsome faces must get left in the cold. Several men expected the prize for being the homliest, and it is the general thought that it should have gone to another party.

No mystery about it. When the Shakers offered some time ago to give away a bottle of their Digestive Cordial to any one who might call at their New York office, there was a great rush and a great many people thought they were crazy.

Subsequent events prove it to have been a very clear advertising transaction, for although they gave away thousands of bottles, it was in the end profitable; nearly every one that took a free bottle came back for more and paid for it with pleasure, saying they had derived better results from its use than from any other medicine they had ever used.

There is nothing so uniformly successful in the treatment of stomach troubles as the Shakers Digestive Cordial, and what is better than all, it relieves at once.

OUR JANUARY SALE of muslin underwear Begins Friday, January 3rd.

It will be the biggest of all our January efforts. The biggest, not only in the number of garments, but also in the worth and greatness of what a dollar will bring.

Raw cotton has almost doubled in price by the pound since the cotton that went into these garments was bought—'twas but last summer. Cost of labor, too, has gone up. And we bought at the bottom of the cotton and labor markets. More, in fact, for we helped a manufacturer to keep his factory open, and his work-people busy, by placing our orders at a time when otherwise they would be idle. So we've helped labor over a hard place, and now your money can command more power and worth in muslin underwear because of it.

Ready Friday next. You won't think of buying before seeing what we have to show; and the show will do every thrifty economical woman good.

"Shave your Soap" —so the soap-makers say, especially if you're washing delicate things. Now, in the name of common sense, what's the use? When you can get Pearline, in powder form for this very reason, why do you want to work over soap, which, if it's good for anything, gets very hard and difficult to cut. Besides, Pearline is vastly better than any powdered soap could be. It has all the good properties of any soap—and many more, too. There's something in it that does the work easily, but without harm—much more easily than any other way yet known. 352

Salt Rheum

And Impure Blood Cured, says Mrs. Pierce of

AMHERST, MASS.

Mr. Geo. B. Pierce and his mother, proprietors of the Amherst, Mass., Creamery Association, relates the following experience:

"For a long time I suffered from Salt Rheum," said Mrs. Pierce, "but about two years ago I slipped and hurt my knee, which made it worse. I can't begin to tell the agony I was in, my limbs became a mass of raw flesh covered with running sores. My friends would say I could not live long, and I thought so too. Well, I heard of Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy and Dr. David Kennedy's Salt Rheum Cream; I commenced using them, and in three weeks I walked out of doors. Last night I walked a mile, and I am sixty-three years of age. It shows that and Salt Rheum Cream can do more than the physicians, for they made me well after my doctor told me I was incurable. I must also tell you of another preparation Dr. Kennedy advised me to use, which did as much for me. It was Dr. David Kennedy's Cherry Balsam. I have had a wretched cough for the past fifteen years, the best doctors in the state united in saying that it was incurable, and that it was only a matter of time before my lungs would give out—my sleep was restless, I would lie awake for hours. I well recollect the first time I used Dr. Kennedy's Cherry Balsam. It relieved my throat at once, and I slept all through that night, the first full night's rest I had in several years. It seemed like a miracle. I took but two bottles and was cured.

Dr. David Kennedy's Cherry Balsam cures asthma, bronchitis, coughs, colds, incipient consumption, whooping cough or croup. Taken with Favorite Remedy, it never fails. Price 25c, 50c, and $1 a bottle. Dr. David Kennedy's Salt Rheum Cream is sold at 50c a package. Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy costs $1 a bottle or six bottles for $5.00.

Favorite Remedy ranks with the medical profession as the most perfect of all blood and nerve medicines. It restores the liver to a healthy condition, and cures constipation. It is a certain cure for all diseases peculiar to women, and affords protection from attacks that originate in change of life. It cures scrofula, salt rheum, tumors, rheumatism, dyspepsia, all kidney, bladder and urinary diseases, gravel, diabetes and Bright's disease. In this last disease it has cured where all else failed.

Duty.

Our blue-eyed daughter with locks of gold,
Rosy and dimpled and eight years old,
Went to Sunday school one fine day,
When grass was springing in balmy May;
The questions went swiftly round the class,
And soon came the turn of our little lass.
"Your duty to neighbors?" the teacher said.
Promptly replied our Golden-head,
"I don't know that kind of duty, you see,
But I know plain duty as well as can be."
His hand on her curls the teacher laid;
"Well, what is 'plain duty,' my little maid?"
"Why, duty's the thing"—with a moment's thought—
"That you don't want to do, but you know you ought!"

MAD JOE.

On the roster of Company "C" his name was recorded as Joseph Foster, but outside of that he was known to officers and men alike as "Mad Joe." He was a quiet, sullen man, with now and then a light in his eyes which reminded you of the baleful glare of a wolf when brought to bay, and if he ever told his story he told it but once. All of us knew it, however. One June day, when he was working in the fields surrounding the pioneer cabin, a band of Indians swooped down and tomahawked his wife, shot three bullets into him and left him for dead, and carried away his 5-years-old boy a captive. The man hovered between life and death for long weeks, but finally began to mend, and when he was well again he started out single-handed to secure a revenge. He soon found that he could accomplish very little that way, and so he enlisted as a soldier.

We knew what "Mad Joe's" hopes were. The Indians would be likely to adopt the boy into the tribe, and in some of our forays we might come across the lad hidden away in an Indian village. The officers entered into his plans in the heartiest of manner. Three times in that first year we surprised and wiped out villages, and the captives were questioned and coaxed and bribed to give us news of the captive boy. They either knew nothing of his whereabouts or were determined to reveal nothing.

As time went by we began to grow afraid of "Mad Joe." He became more sullen, more restless, more menacing. Although a private soldier, he was excused from duty and allowed to do pretty much as he pleased. Sometimes he went about for days and days, muttering to himself and heeding nobody, and sometimes he disappeared and was absent for a week. When he was not with us we knew he was looking for his boy.

Almost two years passed away before word came from the little captive. Then a squaw, who had been taken prisoner, related that, young as he was, he had run away from the village one night three months before, and though hunted for had not been found. She told us this story one mid-afternoon—told it to "Mad Joe" and the captain. When night came the man walked out of the fort. We saw that he had his carbine, knapsack and haversack. He hadn't a word or look for one of us, but walked straight out of the gate and into the darkness with face white as death and eyes which burned like coals of fire.

"He is going to find his boy!" whispered one.

"But his boy was dead long ago!"

"Then he will find his skeleton form and give it burial!"

It was fifty miles away—fifty miles over hill and plains and creek—to the spot where the boy had stolen away from the village one stormy night. The Indians had been whipped back to the reservation weeks ago, and of course the village no longer existed. All of us hoped and prayed that "Mad Joe" would be successful in his search. The boy might have gotten into the foot-hills—he might have found enough to sustain life somehow, and Providence might have willed it that he might escape the wild beasts running about. While we hoped and prayed we yet felt that we had looked our last upon the man.

So it turned out. Twenty days after "Mad Joe" went out from among us into the darkness an Indian told us a queer story. Ten bucks who had gotten permission to leave the reservation on a hunting expedition were asleep in their camp on Last Man's creek. At midnight they were attacked by a single white man, who was in soldiers' uniform. His shouts and shrieks and screams terrified them. He attacked with the ferocity of a mad dog. Of the ten only two escaped, and one of them was so badly wounded that he died a few days later.

"That was 'Mad Joe,'" we said to each other, and though we hoped to hear from him again we were disappointed.

Winter came on and passed slowly away. When the glad spring sunshine and the balmy south winds had melted the snow and started the grass into life, we made a ride to the west to show the Indians that we were on the alert. On the banks of Last Man's creek we found the clean-picked bones of the eight Indians who had fallen victims to a father's vengeance. The wolves and buzzards and the winter snows had whitened the bones until they seemed to have been polished. Five miles to the west we went into camp for the night. It was on the edge of a grove of cottonwoods, and as the men foraged in the grove for fuel for the campfires one of them suddenly called out in alarm. A dozen troopers quickly gathered. Then the top of a bush was turned down and we looked into a thicket. One glance told us the story. There lay a dead body in soldier's uniform, preserved in a wonderful manner by snow and cold, and in its arms was clasped what was little better than a skeleton—the skeleton of a child.

"It is 'Mad Joe' and his dead boy!" we whispered as we turned away.

A grave in the grove for two—a cross on a cottonwood tree—that was all. God had guided the feet of the mad father to where the bones of his child rested, and we buried them as we found them—to sleep until the resurrection morn.—Detroit Free Press.

THE MODERN PRIZE-FIGHT.—At the call of time the men shook hands. Suddenly Liverwurst Ike led with four pages of unwritten manuscript, but Hot Wiener Bill sharply countered with a special session of the Legislature. Liverwurst Ike didn't say a word for ten days, and the fight was accordingly given to his antagonist.—Detroit Tribune.

"You think Mr. Scatters will break the record with his bicycle?" the caller asked. Mrs. Scatters shook her head. "I don't know," she answered anxiously; "he's broken almost everything else." Looking out of the window they saw some men bringing Mr. Scatters into the yard with his other leg in the same condition.—Rocklanp Tribune.

VALUE OF THE NEWSPAPER.

I would rather have newspapers without a government than government without newspapers.

The newspaper is a great mental camera which throws a picture of the whole world on a single sheet of paper.

The newspaper is to-day the most potent of human agencies for the protection and advancement of the race.

I never take up a newspaper without finding something I should have deemed it a loss not to have seen; never without deriving from it instruction and amusement.

For almost all that keeps up in us permanently and effectually the spirit of regard for liberty and the public good we must look to the unshackled and independent energies of the press.

The newspaper is the familiar of all men, of all degrees, of all occupations. If it teaches, it teaches imperceptibly. It has no pompous gown or scholastic rod to abash or control, but prepares itself and is admitted freely and at once to a worldwide intimacy with all kinds and conditions of people.

In my judgement of all the machinery used in communicating information to the public, none is of really more importance to the community at large than the power of the people to communicate by advertisement and bring the buyer and seller together.—Arthur J. Balfour, at the London Newspaper Society Dinner.

Dangerous Drugs.

Avoid the use of white or pink headache powders, they contain dangerous drugs. Taylor's Anti-Headache Powders are brown; they look like ground coffee and they have a delightful aromatic taste. Try them once and you will never be without them. Get them of LeGro & Lynde.

Marvelous Results.

From a letter written by Rev. J. Gunderman, of Dimondale, Mich., we are permitted to make this extract: "I have no hesitation in recommending Dr. King's New Discovery, as the results were almost marvelous in the case of my wife. While I was pastor of the Baptist church at Rivers Junction she was brought down with pneumonia succeeding la grippe. Terrible paroxysms of coughing would last hours with little interruption, and it seemed as if she could not survive them. A friend recommended Dr. King's New Discovery; it was quick in its work and highly satisfactory in results." Trial bottles free of LeGro & Lynde, Palmer; G. L. Keeney, Monson; F. A. Spencer, Ware. Regular size 50c and $1.00.

Electric Bitters.

Electric Bitters is a medicine suited for any season, but perhaps more generally needed in the spring, when the languid exhausted feeling prevails, when the liver is torpid and sluggish and the need of a tonic and alterative is felt. A prompt use of the medicine has often averted long and perhaps fatal bilious fevers. No medicine will act more surely in counteracting and freeing the system from the malarial poison. Headache, indigestion, consumption, dizziness yield to Electric Bitters. Only fifty cents per bottle of LeGro & Lynde, Palmer; G. L. Keeney, Monson; F. A. Spencer, Ware.

Bucklen's Arnica Salve.

It is guaranteed to give perfect satisfaction or money refunded. Price 25 cents per box. For sale by LeGro & Lynde, Palmer; G. L. Keeney, Monson; F. A. Spencer, Ware.

Colds are serious things. They lead to worse things. A cold is the seed of consumption. Croup is a cold's half-brother—it is generally caused by cold, and many a little life has been snuffed out by it because the proper remedy was not at hand.

Dr. Hooker's Cough and Croup Syrup

gives relief at once. It has saved thousands of lives. Every mother should see that it is always in the house. Don't wait till you need it—that may be too late. Contains no opium—absolutely safe—endorsed by physicians for 50 years. Made only by Charles B. Kingsley, Northampton, Mass.

The Crown of Failure.

When you have lived your life,
When you have fought your last good fight and won,
And the day's work is finished, and the sun
Sets on the darkening world and all its strife—
Ere the worn hands are tired with all they've done,
Ere the mind's strength begins to droop and wane,
Ere the first touch of sleep has dulled the brain,
Ere the heart's springs are slow and running dry—
When you have lived your life,
'T were good to die.

If it may not be so,
If you but fight a fight you may not win;
See the far goal, but may not enter in—
'T were better then to die and not to know
Defeat—to die amidst the rush and din,
Still striving, while the heart beats high and fast
With glorious life. If you must fail at last,
Such end were best with all your hope and all
Your spirit in its youth
Then, when you fall.

Far better so to die,
Still toiling upward through the mists obscure,
With all things possible and nothing sure,
Than to be touched by glory and passed by,
To win by chance, fame that may not endure,
That dies and leaves you living, while you strive
With wasted breath to keep its flame alive,
And fan, with empty boast and proud regrets,
Remembrance of a past
The world forgets.

THE THREE-PLY CARPET.

The long low kitchen was radiant with October sunshine, streaming through two west windows. Narrow sash were patterned upon a floor scrubbed to such spotlessness that Almira Ladd unconsciously glanced at her stout shoes as she paused beside the threshold.

"Come in, Almira," called Thankful Armstrong.

She sat by the south window cutting woolen cloth into narrow strips, and had seen the pink sunbonneted figure crossing the yard. Almira went in. The room was filled with appetizing suggestions of apple dumpling and meat stew, cooking in large iron pots. Before the fireplace in a straight-backed rocker sat an equally straight-backed old woman, knitting vigorously. Thankful smiled at the little girl and bade her take a seat, but Dame Armstrong, vouchsafing only a grim nod, resumed the talk that Almira's entrance had interrupted.

"When I was young folks used to be equinomical," she said, her narrow gray eyes narrowing yet more beneath the fluted border of her cap, as she fixed them sternly on her daughter-in-law. "A penny saved is a penny earned, was the motto then, but now it's all for spending instead of laying by—must have this, and that, and the other, until the roof is e'enamost sold above a body's head, and no more notion of saving than a baby in long clothes. What are you doing now but cutting that army blue coat of Pelatiah's into carpet rags? Carpet rags," she repeated contemptuously, "ca-arpet ra-ags! and that as good a piece of cloth as was ever made. If I'd supposed it was to be used in this way do you think I should have carded the wool for that coat, and spun it, and dyed it, and wove it—let alone hiring Billy Phipps, the tailor, to cut and make it? Do you think I should?"

"Pelatiah said it had been in use for 17 years." Thankful made meek reply.

"What if it had? It's as good a coat as Eliphalet wore when he was married, and a much better one than he will wear when 17 years are gone. What with a sickly wife and one who is a spendthrift into the bargain, it'll be amazing if he has a coat to his back then."

The scarlet of pained sensitiveness flashed over Thankful's pale face.

"I've tried my best to be a good wife to Eliphalet. I know I'm not over-strong, but I do my share of the work, and as for wasting—I surely mean to be economical, although it can't be expected that when I am only 20 and have been married but two years I should know all the ways of saving."

"'All the ways,'" repeated the dame meaningly. "Almira, when you get home, tell your ma that we're growing so rich to our house that good clothes are being cut into carpet rags."

Thankful held the garment to the window. The light behind it shone through various holes and worn places. Almira, who had been unconsciously swinging her feet as she looked from one face to the other, now found herself in the embarrassing position of umpire, elected by no volition of her own. She leaned primly back in the yellow-painted wooden chair and stared at the strings of red peppers festooned from hooks in the ceiling above the fireplace. The half frightened curve of firmly closed lips told her resolution neither to assent or dissent.

"What are you grumbling about now, Mother Armstrong?" asked a cheery, high-pitched voice, as a woman several years Thankful's senior came from the pantry. She went to the fireplace, and swinging out the crane lifted the lid of the stewpot and began stirring its contents with a long-handled iron spoon. A burst of more delicious odor steamed freshly out at every stir, and a black kitten which had been dozing in a corner uncurled with sleepy stretchings and expectant sniffs.

"If that old coat being used for carpet rags is what worries you, don't take Thankful to task about it. I brought it from the attic and asked her to cut it up. I won't have useless things lumbering the house and hatching moths. If you talk so much you'll get rheumatics in your tongue," she added, laughing.

"If anybody's tongue gets rheumaticky it will be yours," retorted the dame, but a grimly amused smile hovered about her lips.

She and her eldest son's wife always got on well together. Freelove's independence pleased while Thankful's sensitiveness annoyed her. The sharp, complaining speech was but the querulousness of four score years and five, and it angered her that this younger daughter-in-law should take her keen words so to heart. Glancing up she detected tears on the face bent low over the old blue coat. Her irritation found words again.

"Cry—oh, yes, cry! It's pleasant to see a woman grown acting like a baby in arms."

But Thankful, dropping coat and shears, passed hastily out of doors and out of hearing.

"She can cry easy as a hen can cackle," grumbled the dame, watching the slim retreating figure. "Almira, when you're grown don't be such a tear spout."

Freelove looked around and saw the small visitor.

"Why, how do you do, Almira? I didn't notice that you were here. How is your ma to-day?

"Pretty well," dimpled Almira. "She sent me down to borrow a nutmeg 'cause the minister's folks are coming to tea next Tuesday, and we're all out of spice for cake. She said I might stay half an hour and visit with Tempy. Isn't she home?" "Yes, she's up attic sorting herbs. I'll call her." Freelove slipped the pot-lid into place and stepped to the stair door. "Tempy! Tempe-rance!"

Answer sounded faintly back from upper regions. Almira began swinging her feet again and let her prim attitude relax. The kitten, growing aware that no portion of stew was forthcoming, frolicked about a yellow leaf that had fluttered in through the open door.

"Don't you think the table is well scoured?" asked Freelove.

"Yes'm," said Almira with eyes on the kitten."

"Temperance did it this morning. I think she succeeded beautifully for a first attempt."

Almira looked now with much interest at the hardwood table. It was scoured to immaculate whiteness, and the heads of the brass screws holding it together shone like burnished gold. She wondered if Tempy's arms had not ached before finishing.

"It looks real nice," she said slowly. She had never scoured a table and did not like to feel that Temperance excelled her in housewifery. She determined to ask her mother if she might scour their kitchen table on the next holiday, Saturday. At that time country schools kept six days in every other week. Some one came running down stairs. It was Temperance.

"What is it, ma?" she asked with a hand on the door-latch. Then she glanced beyond her mother's smile at Almira. The two pairs of blue eyes looked happily at each other. "Old Tab has six new kittens. They are out in the barn. Come, Almira, and see them."

As they crossed the yard together Temperance said:—

"We're making a carpet. I'm to help sew the rags when Aunt Thankful gets them cut."

At times Temperance assumed an air of importance over her doings and belongings. Now her chin was thrust out in her most superior way, and Almira felt a stir of friendly rivalry.

"Our carpet is away at the weaver's," she said. "It will done pretty soon. You must come and see our parlor when it's done."

Temperance waited a little before replying.

"I shall want to see it. I've never seen a hip-skip carpet. Ours is to be striped."

Almira, quenched, tried to find consolation in remembering that her carpet would be done first, and that her mother said she did not believe the Armstrongs would have begun a carpet had they not known she was making one.

The big east door was open and the subdued mellowness of late afternoon streamed into the barn, showing long, clean floor and empty stanchions, and lighting into the pale yellow relief, against half-tones of interior, a high heap of straw near the horse stalls. Some cider apples piled in one corner made a dash of mottled redness and gave out an enticing, spicy odor. Away up toward cobwebbed rafters at the west gable end were numerous chinks and cracks and knot-holes, through which rounds and slits and triangles of sunshine dropped over the mowed hay. Along the peak was a row of mud nests, deserted in early autumn by the swallows, who, with their summer broods, were now away in the southland. A Phoebe bird perched motionless and voiceless in an open upper window—a tiny silhouette against a square of brilliant blue sky.

"You'll have to climb." Temperance paused beside the ladder lashed against a beam leading from floor to scaffold. "Old Tab has hidden those kittens way up under the eaves."

"I like to climb," said Almira.

As Temperance set her foot upon the lowest rung she started at the sound of a man's voice.

"Be careful, girls."

Both children looked around. Eliphalet Armstrong was hunting for something in the harness closet behind the heap of straw. Thankful stood beside him—her face turned away.

"Oh, Uncle Liph, how you scared me! Yes, we'll be careful."

They climbed to the scaffold and disappeared across the hay that rustled under their feet. The bird silhouette turned its head to look down at them, found wings, and darted away with plaintive cry of "Phebe! Phebe!" Their happy chatter over the kittens was audible to the two people below.

"No, Liph," said Thankful in repressed tones, "I can't endure it. I must go away—live away. Your mother will be much better pleased to have only Freelove to keep the house. She likes Freelove. It's plain enough to be seen that she doesn't like me."

Eliphalet tumbled over the things on one of the shelves and picked up a husking pin, which he fitted to his finger. He shut the closet door and buttoned it without looking at his wife.

"You are too easily troubled."

"'Easily,'" echoed Thankful. "It's been just so ever since I came here. Oh, Liph! we would be much happier were we living by ourselves. Why may we not arrange to leave with the coming spring?'

"Thankful, when my father died he left mother in care of her sons. She has been a good mother to me, a loving, faithful mother. It would be proving myself unworthy to quit the old place where her remaining years must be so few, for it would hurt her sorely—sorely. Besides, half of the farm is mine, and Pelatiah has not the money to buy it from me now, neither could he carry it on alone. So as matters are, how could I arrange to leave? You do not understand."

"No, I do not understand," said Thankful bitterly. "I understand nothing save that your mother did not wish you to marry an orphan with never a penny to her name. It is that—she blames me that you did so."

"And well she may," answered Eliphalet, a slow smile lighting his somewhat heavy features, "and well she may, for indeed you are the one to be blamed. Had not your face and your ways been so sweet I never should have wanted you. Wife, are you sorry that you married me?"

"Oh, Liph, you know I am not." The eyes under the long wet lashes were uplifted with beautiful tenderness. "And I'll try not to be troubled any more. It is because she is your mother, Liph, that I am grieved that she will not let me love her. But it all will come right somehow."

Eliphalet put his arm about his wife and kissed her.

"Well, I must go back to the field. Pel will think I've deserted him. It'll take five bushels yet to fill the cart and it's most milking time. I hope I shan't break this husking pin."

When the little girls scrambled down from the mow the barn was empty. A group of hungry fowls had gathered about the corn crib steps, and they ran toward Temperance as she came in sight.

"It's time for me to feed the poultry and hunt eggs," she said, noting how low the sun hung above the hills. "Do stay and help me, Almira."

But Almira thought her half-hour must be up, and the kitchen clock showed that it was. Thankful sat by the window again cutting carpet rags, and Freelove was setting the table for supper. She stopped to bring a nutmeg and wrap it in a bit of brown paper.

"Tell your ma she needn't feel in a hurry about paying back, because we've got plenty."

"Yes'm," said Almira. "But pa's going to the village week after next and he'll get some there,"

Temperance went with her to the gate, leaning upon it to wave her hand when Almira looked back. The families were but a half-mile apart—the Ladd place being just over the hill and the Armstrong place at the foot. Almira thought it pleasanter living on the hill because in coasting time she could slide down to Tempy's door; too, one could see so far—away over stretch of wood and farm land with home buildings set at varying intervals of neighborliness, an occasional church spire, glints of blue water about saw and gristmills, and reddish blur of roofs marking the nearest village 10 miles away. To Almira the sky limits domed all of the world worth knowing—the remainder was compounded in laboriously learned geography lessons.

About the home fence leaves lay in heaps of russet, mottled with yellow and red. She rustled through, kicking them up at every step. As she shut the gate she spied a high-headed horse and dusty chairs hitched to a ring at the corner of the barn. A boy of 10 was leisurely picking an armful of wood from the pile near the shed. She called to him.

"Who's the company, Eph?"

"Mary Ann."

"Oh, goody!" Almira gave a delighted skip and ran up the slope toward the house.

Mary Ann was their sister, and 19 years old. She worked at a linen draper's shop in the village, returning on a Saturday to spend the Sabbath when her father made occasional trips to sell farm produce, and could bring her back with him. Almira was very fond of her sister, who petted her and often brought her some pretty thing to wear and who told about that wonderful place—the village. She had never been there. Her father had promised to take her some time.

"But how did Mary Ann get here? Who brought her?"

Ephraim cocked one eye and looked knowing.

"She's got a beau. She's going to be married."

"She isn't either!" indignantly declared Almira, to whom these terms only meant something vaguely unpleasant.

"Yes siree— honest and true. And I guess," said Ephraim, who never lost occasions to tease his little sister, "I guess she will live so far away that we shan't ever see her any more."

"I don't believe it, I'll ask ma." And Almira bounced, flushed and vexed, into the kitchen, crying with a protesting wail in her voice, "Ma, has Mary Ann got a beau? And is she going to be married?"

"Almira!"

Checked by her mother's look and tone she glanced through the open door of the parlor—there in a large crimson-covered rocker sat Mary Ann, with a face that, despite suddenly severe dignity, seemed to have caught a reflection from the cloth against which her blonde head rested, and opposite, his elbow leaning upon the top of a fiddle-backed chair, stood a young man who turned amused eyes from Almira to his companion, showing beautifully white teeth as he smiled. Almira's abashed gaze noted his mop of curly black hair and the heavy silver watch chain against his red velvet vest—then she fled to the washroom, so mortified at having shown silliness before a stranger that she did not appear until the stranger himself came out with Mary Ann to fetch her into the parlor.

Yellow butterflies, settled about muddy spots left along the narrow road by yesterday's rain, flew up at approaching steps only to light farther ahead of them, as Almira and Temperance walked home from school one April afternoon, with queerly elongated shadows of themselves moving before. Voices of bluebird and robin and scent of budding things were in the air; hills were showing a vaporous hue as if rain might fall again soon.

"Tempy," said Almira, "I know a secret, and if you'll never, never breathe it, I'll tell you."

Of course Temperance promised—as what lover of secrets would not? Almira, stepping so close to her friend that their shadows bumped heads, imparted in confidential tone the fact that their Mary Ann was to be married the last of next month.

"Married? Dear me!"

Temperance's surprise was highly gratifying.

"Yes—really married. His name is Reuben, and he has a silver watch, and such white teeth! Mary Ann has sent us a brand new ingrain carpet, which we shall put down in the parlor, and our rag carpet is to be in the sitting-room."

"I should think Mary Ann would want her carpet for herself," said Temperance, curtly.

"Oh, she has another. She bought one, and Mrs. Smith, the linen draper's wife, gave her one. It's just as pretty, ours is—salmon and green and brown, with flowers all over it."

But Temperance only said as she closed the home gate: "It must be quite gay. Do you know I am going to school bare-foot tomorrow? Ma said I could leave off shoes as soon as yellow butterflies come. How thick they are to-day?"

Despite her dearest friend's palpable snub regarding the new carpet, Almira climbed the hill happy in her pride. In all the town was but one other ingrain, and that adorned Squire Pettigrew's parlor. She felt that this new acquisition lifted her mother to the level of the squire's wife, who wore a stand alone silk and a gold watch to church. She could afford to ignore Tempy's superciliousness.

A few weeks later Dame Armstrong came up to spend the afternoon. Almira, who was washing dinner dishes at the sink fronting the open window, saw a well-known Shaker bonnet bobbing into sight over the crest of the hill, and ran, with the delft plate in one hand, to tell her mother of the approaching guest. Mrs. Ladd met the dame at the door.

"It's real good of you to come up," she said, pulling a large chair nearer the pleasantest window, and waiting to take the Shaker bonnet. "I'm just ready to begin my week's mending, and it will be so much nicer to have some one here with whom I can can make comfortable talk over it."

"I haven't climbed this hill for any nice, comfortable talk, snapped the dame, tugging at the Shaker strings as if trying to choke back articulation. "I've come to free my mind—that's what I have."

"You don't say," murmured Mrs. Ladd.

"I do say, and what's more, I've a good deal to say." Dame Armstrong settled herself in the splint-bottomed chair and drew her knitting from her pocket. "Something ought to be said when things are going on as they are now."

Mrs. Ladd was accustomed to the dame's moods. "What's the matter?" she asked, cheerfully.

"I should think there was matter enough—what with Thankful crying over her work like a baby, and Freelove sailing around with her head as high as a yearling colt's, and a gorgeous broughten carpet down in the parlor. That's the way money goes! And when I try to reason with 'em, Thankful she bursts into tears and says she ain't never been able to suit me, and Freelove talks about old folk's notions. And my two sons digging and moiling and toiling to be impoverished in sech manner! That's what the matter is."

"Well, now, I wouldn't look at it just so," was the soothing rejoinder. "A good boughten carpet will last a long time, and it's quite the fashion to have one."

"S'posing it is the fashion? I got along without any carpets, and I guess my sons' wives a'n't no better'n folks need to be. Haven't I lived year after year with my parlor floor sanded and traced in patterns made with a broom? And wasn't all the other floors bare? Only last fall the girls spent weeks a-sewing rags to be woven, and now that carpet ain't good enough for the parlor—it must be put in the summer living room and a boughten one put in the parlor! Think of paying a dollar a yard for something to walk on—to walk on!" she repeated with indescribable emphasis. "Do you suppose I am going to walk on money, Mis' Ladd? I says to the girls, 'Never will I step foot on that carpet!' And I never will, Mis' Ladd. The girls may have just as much company as they like, but so long as that carpet is in their parlor I shan't go in there."

Fall days came around again—touches of high color along uplands and in hollows, changing to boughs naked and wind-hustled. Then came the Indian summer of early November; the time when autumn pauses upon the threshold of winter, and in a dreamborn reverie of a dear dead June; the time when the few remaining nuts drop at a wind's breath, and jays scream among woodlands, and hills are wrapped in smoky haze; the time when children begin counting the days before Thanksgiving with that zestful anticipation which belongs only to extreme youth. Ephraim and Almira came in from school at half past four one Saturday to find the dusky-growing kitchen redolent of cookery odors and a long row of mince pies on the pantry shelf. Mrs. Ladd was taking some from the pantry shelf. Two fat little turnovers cooling in the windows were pounced upon with shrieks of delight. Mrs. Ladd was taking some squash pies from the brick oven, where were glimpses of brown bread and a kettle of beans.

"Almira! Ephraim! don't eat those until supper time. There are some rye doughnuts on a plate in the pantry. You may have one apiece."

The turnovers were resigned with covetous glances. Almira, nibbling her large rye doughnut as she hovered about her mother in attempt to peep within the oven of promise, set up an injured wail.

"Oh, Ma! Eph's just grabbed a big bite out of my doughnut! Can't he stop?

"Go straight out and fill the woodbox, Ephraim," said his mother. And Ephriam went—pausing only to look through the crack of the door and make sure that the last bit of doughnut was disappearing. Almira's tender heart frequently led her to make propitiatory offerings of lunch to her brother's more active appetite after complaint of him. But now she was not thinking of Eph.

"Something's happened at Tempy's," she announced. "Her grandma has fallen down stairs and just about killed herself."

"For the land sake!'s" Mrs. Ladd started so violently that a succulent squash pie nearly slipped from her hands to the floor. "Why didn't you tell me the minute you came in?"

"I didn't s'pose you could help it." Almira looked alarmed. Her mother's tone was so severe with startled apprehension that she felt herself to have committed an unpardonable error. "The doctor's there. I saw his horse at the gate."

"I hope there's no bones broken."

"No, there isn't," piped Almira with sense of giving happier information. "The doctor said she was just stunned, but at her age such a fall might prove serious. She fell from the top stair right against the back door of the parlor and burst it open. Mrs. Dea. Abell was there spending the afternoon, and she said she came near having the hysteriekes—'t was so unexpected, seeing Grandma Armstrong tumble into the room like that."

Almira paused—out of breath. Mrs. Ladd was too sympathetically troubled for amusement over the story's conclusion. Her rosy face was puckered by anxiety.

"Dear! dear! to think of it. Dear! dear! Fly around spry as you can, Almira, and set the table. You may get that cool squash pie from the pantry window and a plate of gingerbread. I won't take up the beans until your pa comes in. Right after supper I must go down to the Armstrongs' and see if there is anything I can do.

When Mrs. Ladd entered the room there lay Dame Armstrong, the strong-featured wrinkled face looked waxen white against the pillows, and over it every ministration that native instinct could suggest hung Thankful. A gift hitherto unsuspected evinced itself now in this pretty dark-eyed wife of Eliphalet—the penniless orphan who weakened under the heavy work and wept under sharp words had not come dowerless to her husband after all. It was Thankful who through weeks of watching heated compresses for the pain-racked old limbs while Freelove stood about in helpless inefficiency; it was Thankful who bathed the hot forehead and drew the shade to keep the light from fever-glazed eyes; it was Thankful whose touch was so tender, whose ways were so deft, whose footfalls so soft that the moan of the sufferer was always and only for her. And turning with clinging, almost child-like to this daughter never before accepted at heart, Dame Armstrong's face softened to a broken softness new to her dictatorial habit and querulous old age.

It was long before she was about the house, and it was not until pussy-willows had disappeared, and yellow butterflies had come, and hights sloped greenly toward greener valleys that she toiled up the hill to Mrs. Ladd's. Her brisk erectness was gone forever. She looked years older than when last she sat, knitting and snuffbox in hand, by the living-room window, but somehow Almira felt pleasure at fetching a stool for her feet, and was hardly timid about showing some new patterns in patch work. The dame's eyes now held less of severity and rebuke when turned upon little girls who sometimes soiled pinafores or tore frocks.

"It seems so good to see you about again that I must sit and look at you a spell before fixing for the afternoon," said Mrs. Ladd, folding hands across ample lap. "Thankful nursed you up pretty well, didn't she!"

"Yes, she did." In dame's voice was a quiver of feeling; her eyes glistened with held-back tears. She let her fingers rest upon the coarse gray sock she was toeing off and looked through the open window across a dandelion spangled field, from which came sweet and strong and clear the meadow lark's call: "Spring of the year! Spring of the year!"

"Yes," went on Dame Armstrong, "she's a born nurse and the best girl in the world, Thankful is. And I didn't know enough to see it until it was knocked into me. Mis' Ladd, we hear often enough about people falling from grace, but after this I shall hold that a body can fall into it. I've been punished, and I look at things different. I don't hold out now against the girls. I was sinful and stiffnecked about that carpet; I said I wouldn't ever set foot on it—and I didn't, Mis' Ladd, I didn't. The Lord let me have my own way, and I went pitching in onto it headfirst!"—Mary Clarke Huntington, in the Sunday Republican.

PALMER NEWS.

Annual Meeting of St. Paul's Parish.

The annual meeting of St. Paul's Universalist parish was held Monday evening with an average attendance. W. W. Leach was chosen moderator. The treasurer, W. E. Stone, made a report in detail of the parish finances. The total income from all sources amounted to $2550 during the year; of this the Ladies' Social Union gave $175, the Young People's Union $23, the Sunday school $139, Sunday offerings, $315. After paying a small deficit of last year and making improvements and repairs costing over $500, the treasurer reported all bills paid, and a few dollars and some unpaid pew rentals with which to begin another year. This has been rather an unusual year with the parish, as unexpected repairs were absolutely necessary, which at first seemingly interfered with a desire to close the year with all bills paid, but by special efforts in the way of raising funds all expenses were met. There will be a somewhat general reduction of expenses the coming year. The following officers were chosen for the coming year: Clerk, William Merriam; executive committee, G. F. Sedgwick, W. W. Leach and Charles Keith; treasurer, W. E. Stone; ushers, Brigham Ball, Charles Keith; delegates to state convention, W. W. Leach, G. F. Sedgwick, with Charles Keith and Mrs. A. M. Smith as alternates. The executive committee was made the music committee, and also given full power to appoint a collector of pew rentals, janitor, etc. It is expected that the choir will be the same as last year: Miss Annie Fish, organist; F. A. Royce, tenor and director; Miss Clara Sexton of Springfield, soprano; Miss Moffatt, contralto; G. F. Sedgwick, bass.

The mercury tumbled down to 15° below zero Sunday night, and aided by a strong wind crept unexpectedly and unwelcomed into the houses. Frozen water pipes were numerous Monday morning, and as the wind continued all day and that night furnaces and boilers were taxed to their utmost capacity in a vain attempt to keep buildings warm. The cold snap made the ice men happy, and another week of freezing weather will enable them to commence the harvesting of their crop.

Forest Leach, an engineer on the New London Northern road, met with a severe accident in the Palmer yard Monday afternoon. She was a quiet, retiring girl, thoroughly devoted to her home. A few days before her death she made all arrangements for the funeral, and her wishes were carried out, the clergyman speaking from Thess. 4:3. The floral tributes were Jacqueminot roses, white pinks, chrysanthemums and hyacinths, each bunch denoting her age. The body was taken to Rumney, N. H., for burial.

Rev. F. J. Hale of Bondsville writes that "The 'Reader of the JOURNAL' who last week informed us, through your pages, that we were all mistaken in supposing that this is a leap year, is himself at fault; 1896 is a leap year, but the exception that he has in mind comes four years later, the final year of the century. This is the case with the final year of each century, except the year 2000 and each fourth century afterwards, the final year of which are leap years." Doubtless the person who asked for the information last week will be gratified to learn that 1896 is a leap year, for the query came from a representative of the sex which is allowed special and unusual prerogatives during leap years, and as in some cases a lapse of eight years between these privileges might prove fatal to long-cherished hopes and plans, it will of course be a relief to know that 1896 is one of the leap years.

"A Summer Shower," one of the plays modeled after the "Old Homestead," with Arthur C. Sidman as the good-natured but keen-witted country squire, who, besides being justice of the peace holds the honors of postmaster and school trustee, will be on the boards at the opera house next Tuesday evening. The company is at Worcester this week, and the Spy of Tuesday said: "The piece itself is as pretty as one could wish to see, and admits of some specially quaint acting of the refined rural order. Mr. Sidman is the embodiment of simplicity, and his natural acting of the part of Ezra Haskins, J. P., easily places him on a level with the best in his line." The Telegram said: "The play is cleverly constructed, and the supporting company contains clever people. The comedy has a plot and a good one, and at the same time without interfering with the thread of the story, several specialties are introduced. In the third act an old grist mill is seen in active operation, and in the final act a rain storm is introduced." Seats on sale at Allen's.

Tuesday morning when her husband went down stairs to waken her, he found her partially dressed, kneeling beside the sofa, dead. She had not been dead probably more than 30 minutes when found. Although the family has lived in town but a short time, Mrs. Stone had won the friendship and esteem of her neighbors and acquaintances, who will remember her as a kind and loveable woman. Mr. Hatch of Ware presented Mr. Howard with a loaf of cake beautifully ornamented, upon which appeared in white confections the legend "Howard, 96 years." We wish Mr. Howard many happy returns of the day.

On Monday, while James Hartnett stopped at a house on the Belchertown road and was warming himself before a comfortable fire, his horse outside thought that he too would find more comfortable quarters, and started for home. Notwithstanding the half cord of green birch wood he had to draw, he came down the road at a lively gait. When near the post office he came in contact with a hitching post, which he broke off without much ado, but the next obstacle was a fence, which brought him to a standstill. The horse got all the exercise necessary, and so did Mr Hartnett, having two miles to walk before reaching home.

LEGISLATIVE MATTERS.

BOSTON, Jan. 8, 1896.

"Where McGregor sits is the head of the table," and though the Democratic conference has voted that Mr. Quirk of Boston shall be the chairman of their party caucus whenever one is called, it will make precious little difference. The real leader of the Democracy will be James H. Mellen of Worcester, and Mr. Quirk will have only an empty name. Close to Mr. Mellen will be his colleagues, Messrs. Moriarty and Melaven, either of whom is a better speaker than Mr. Quirk and more likely to command a following in the House. Then there are new Democrats who will have to be reckoned with. Mr. Adams of Framingham was not in the House last year, though he was the year before. He is a quiet sort of member, not given to noisy speech-making, but he is a man of influence and it is not always the most forward men who are the real leaders of their fellows. Then there is a new young Democrat of Ware, Lawyer Storrs, of whom complimentary words are said, but of whom the House knows nothing yet. But it is all wrong for either party to start off with so much anxiety regarding real or nominal leadership. The House is not here, nor the Senate either, for the sake of forwarding the ambitions of any man or of any party. There promises to be too much of foolish playing for political position and too little forgetfulness of persons and party in the service of the public. There is gossip already about the speakership of the House for 1897 and the course of Speaker Meyer in apparently favoring Mr. Lowell of Boston and not giving as good places to his possible rival, Mr. Bates of Boston, as he might reasonably have expected. The House committeeships seem to be as satisfactory as usual. The committee on constitutional amendments seems made up to assure the passage of the biennial amendment which has been taken from the files of last year and referred to this committee. As the committee was announced, only one of the Senate members and only two of the House members were unknown in their preferences. It is not certain that there is but one man on the committee of eleven who is opposed to the amendment. As there is strong opposition this year to the passage of the amendment, it hardly seems like treating the minority with due consideration. Some of the strongest Republican names in the state are signed to a statement against the amendment, and the effort of the business and wealthy portion of the community generally to pass the amendment will be strongly resisted by those who believe that true safety in politics consists in keeping the office-holders close to the people, even though it may necessitate an election every year. Good government is the stakes, and many of the people are willing to sacrifice something to secure it.

Speaking of the ambition of members, there has just been a display of disappointment in the Senate which will not help the member who made the demonstration. Senator Sanger of Suffolk, who was an unsuccessful candidate for the presidency of the Senate, was appointed by President Lawrence second on the judiciary committee, second on rules, first on constitutional amendments, and so on. In the Senate he rose to a question of privilege and aired his grievance at not getting the chairmanship of the judiciary, said that he did not want to be so near to the president as in second place on rules, and resigned all of his places, except that on the judiciary, which he deemed of most honor. But he has not helped himself by his display. Men are sent to the Legislature to serve the public, not for their political preferment, and any man who takes such umbrage at a supposed slight only hurts himself.

The warlike tone of the times is echoed in the matters which are presented to the Legislature. Mr. T. F. Keenan of Boston, whom the members of last year will hold in lively recollection, has offered a set of resolutions setting forth the assault upon our national dignity which has been made by England, affirms the awfulness of the horrors of war, adds that it is better to endure these than to submit to insult or loss of self-respect, and closes by pledging our last penny and last drop of blood to sustain the policy of President Cleveland. Really, it is quite a formidable document. Mr. Keenan did not want it disposed of in the prosaic way of reference to the committee on federal relations, but moved a suspension of the rules. But the House thought that deliberation was a pre-requisite of such matters, and sent the bill to the committee. Mr. J. H. Mellen of Worcester also put in a resolution for an inquiry to be made regarding the condition of our coast defenses and of our military forces, in view of the danger of war with Great Britain. This was referred to the committee on military affairs. He did not ask for a suspension of rules.

The Legislature has lost almost the first week of the session by a needless delay in the announcement of committees. Speaker Meyer had the idea that it would be better to abolish the committee on taxation and to put its work upon the finance committee. He also wanted the name of the latter committee changed to "Ways and Means." But it was suspected that the cat in the meal in the proposed consolidation of committees was to make it easier so get legislation in favor of some of the speaker's taxation ideas. So there was a strong protest in the Senate, after the House had let the change pass through unchallenged out of compliment to the speaker. The evils of the change were emphasized, and the consequence was that the new plan had only one vote in its favor. The change of name has been accomplished, so that now there is a Senate ways and means, a House ways and means and a joint ways and means, instead of the committee on treasury, finance and expenditure, by which these commitees were formerly called. The change only makes more work and does good to nobody.

The loss of Clerk McLaughlin is already severely felt in the House. The new clerk has not nearly as good a voice as Mr. McLaughlin, though this was supposed to be the least danger connected with the change. But neither the speaker nor the new clerk are able to go alone yet. It is amusing to the older members to see the speaker and clerk both in consultation with Assistant Clerk Kimball, and have to wait in the transactions of the House until he has passed upon the way in which the business ought to be done. He is a good man for his position, but there is felt a sad need of the comprehensive knowledge and ready wit of the former clerk in order to secure the prompt dispatch of business. If the election were to be held to-day there seems to be no question but that Mr. McLaughlin would be reëlected. Some of the new members who did not vote for him had but little idea of the nature of his duties, and regret that they were misled. But it is too late, unless such pressure is brought upon Clerk Sleeper as to lead him to resign, and that is not probable. The selection of Editor Penniman of the Standard to be second assistant clerk only adds to the conviction that the change was an A. P. A. move. This affair has created much interest all over the state, and will probably not die out before next election.

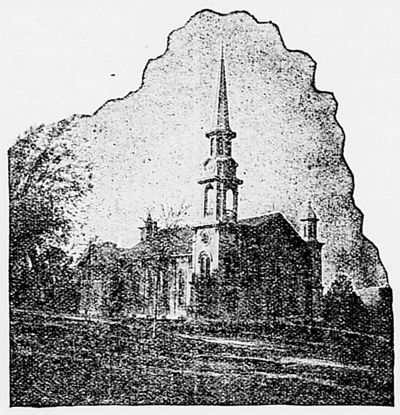
NEIGHBORHOOD NOTES.

MONSON.

THE CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH.

A Review of Its 134 Years of Existence.

The history of the Monson Congregational church is interesting from the day of its organization to the present, a period of 134 years, for it was on June 23, 1762, that in a little building, rectangular in shape and about 20 feet high, having neither chimney nor steeple, and situated very near the site of the present church, about 25 persons banded themselves together under the name of the First Parish of Monson. The town had been incorporated but two years before, and the people had held meetings in private dwellings in the north and south parts of the town alternately up to this time. The records show that it was early in that year that Lieut. Thomas Stebbins was authorized to procure of Col. Dwight, "land on which to set the meeting house." As may be supposed, the building did not rival St. Peter's cathedral in elegance; the seats were rude boards, and as in December, 1762, it was voted "to remove the meeting from the meeting house for the winter season," it is also safe to presume that it was nothing to boast of for warmth. Some years later good floors and pews were put in, but the upper part was never finished, the beams and rafters and bristling nails and cobwebs all telling their own story for the 41 years that the building stood.



THE PRESENT CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH, MONSON.

The first pastor, ordained and installed on the day that the church was organized, was Abishia Sabin. His pastorate covered nine years, of which little is known except that the "half-way covenant" was in use, and that town meetings were called to fix the price of wood and provisions, in which his salary was paid. He resigned on account of poor health. He was followed by Rev. Jesse Ives, who was installed June 23, 1773. He is described in the records as a wise and useful man, "remarkably gifted in prayer." The church membership increased to 111 during his 32 years' pastorate. In 1803 the old meeting house was torn down to make way for the new one, which was dedicated Nov. 16, 1803. This was said to be the best one in the county at that time. It was similar in shape to the old one, but much larger, being 80 feet long by 30 feet wide, and had a steeple. At first there was but one room, with galleries on three sides, and was fitted with square pews. The building cost about $9000. Mr. Ives died Dec. 31, 1805. Dr. Alfred Ely was his successor, and was installed Dec. 18, 1806. For 60 years Dr. Ely was the town oracle, and to this day scarcely a story is told of "ye olden times" in which his name is not mentioned. Not only was he authority in church matters, but in town affairs; in the Academy (incorporated in 1804); in the family even. Not only in Monson was his influence felt, but in the region round about. He was appointed by the Legislature a member of the corporation of Amherst College in the year it was incorporated. He was also prominent in the American Board of Foreign Missions, and his name is on one of the windows in Memorial church, Springfield. The Sunday school was organized in 1819, and the "female praying circle" in 1827.

In 1837 the church was altered materially at a cost of $3000. The side galleries were removed, and the square pews were replaced by those of modern style. It is related that prior to this time a closet near the pulpit contained a cask, from which those who did not repair to Uncle Amos's tavern Sunday noon were wont to draw inspiration for the afternoon sermon, for those were the times when the Sabbath was literally God's day, and the people thought nothing less than three hours preaching was sufficient to carry them safely through the week. Those were the days also of footstoves. The women worshipers replenished their stoves with coals from a neighboring house, then the house of Dr. Ede Whittaker, now Hammond Hall, the dormitory of the Academy. An incident is remembered concerning one of the deacons who apparently prided himself on his personal appearance. He, for a time, wore a large cape-overcoat. One Sunday he stood with folded arms during the singing, leaning on the pew-door:

"Like a warior taking his rest,
With his martial cloak around him."

Suddenly the latch gave way, and the deacon sprawled in the aisle. In his effort to rise he became entangled in his coat, and his friends were compelled to render assistance.

Rev Samuel Bartlett was settled as a colleague of Dr. Ely in 1853. He was one of the brightest men the church has ever employed. He remained, however, but three years. That the society was not rapid moving enough to suit his taste is evident from his farewell sermon, in which he said: "I will no longer be a headstone to a dead church." He afterward became professor of Biblical literature in Chicago Theological Seminary, and later president of Dartmouth College. He still means to be progressive, for last summer he learned to ride a bicycle. Rev. Charles B. Kittredge, who became a colleague pastor in 1846, retained the place until 1852, and was invariably spoken of as Priest Kittredge. He owned a saddle horse of which he was justly proud, and when riding took nobody's dust. When Tom Morris was acting-postmaster, when the office was in the "Century Hotel" and the salary depended upon the amount of business done, Mr. Kittredge rushed in one day with some letters just after the mail had closed, and asked Morris to open the mail for them. This Morris refused to do, and Mr. Kittredge, thinking to bring him to terms on account of the vast sum which the office would lose, said: "Very well, I will take them to Palmer!" Imagine the reverend gentleman's astonisement when he was told that he could take them to h—l if he desired. Rev. Thomas Cotton came in 1855 and remained until three months after the death of Dr. Ely, which occurred July 6, 1866.

The only cushioned seats were those of the pew-owners, the free seats and those occupied by the Academy students being utterly innocent of those articles of comfort. Think of those students sitting in the front row on those old hard seats, and blame them if you can for occasionally stealing a cushion from a near-by pew. Dea. Absolom Shaw owned a particularly inviting cushion, and it was too frequently missing from his pew to allow him to be good natured. He even went so far as to nail it to the seat, but that did no good. One Sunday the deacon was late. When he reached his pew the cushion was not, for the boys had taken it. Without an instant's hesitation the deacon strode solemnly up the aisle, and with a face white and set he clutched the end of that cushion, and drawing it from under those five or more startled boys, shouldered it and marched back to his pew. Rev. Charles B. Sumner was installed in 1868, having previously been an instructor in the Academy. In 1871 or '72 the meeting house was thought by many to be "arky," and although there was some opposition, the old building was sold to D. G. Green and moved to a point on North Main street southeast of its former site, and was used for business purposes and halls. It is of the pulpit of this church that the story is told that the builder, in the presence of the pastor and deacons, securely nailed a bottle of New England rum under its baseboard, and when some 70 years later the pulpit was changed that bottle came to light, and that the contents were pronounced good. The building was burned last April.

The present church was dedicated June 18, 1873. The main part is 100 feet long by 60 feet wide, and has room for chapel and social purposes. With the organ and furnishings the cost was about $40,000. Mr. Sumner left in 1879, and is now connected with Pomona College in California. He was followed by Rev. Franklin S. Hatch, who was installed Nov. 30, 1887. Extensive repairs have been made upon the church, first the chapel, and two years ago the auditorium, when new windows and a new organ were put in, and the room was refrescoed. Last year the parlors were redecorated, and electricity put in. The Dorcas society plans to put electricity into the entire church.

Hearing on the Petition to Narrow North Main Street.

The county commissioners gave a hearing in the selectmen's room in Memorial Hall Wednesday morning in regard to relaying that portion of North Main street near the bounds of the Center cemetery. After the reading of the petition by the chairman of the board of commissioners, Dr. George E Fuller, chairman of the cemetery commissioners, spoke in behalf of the petition, pointing out the variations in the width of the road from Flynt's store to the turnout on a map drawn by Architect Parsons of the W. N. Flynt Granite Co. The road at some points is 66 feet, and at others 54 feet. At the south-east corner of the cemetery, which is the point over which the question between the selectmen and the cemetery commissioners has arisen, it is 66 feet wide. As is well known, the latter have followed a plan laid out by a Hartford architect in their work of beautifying this Thompson extension the past two years, and in this plan a winding road, having its terminus at this southeast corner, has an important bearing in the matter. The heirs of the late Cyrus W. Holmes are putting in a wall around the south and east bounds of the cemetery, and a handsome arch at the entrance is a part of the scheme. In order to carry out the architect's plan it seems necessary to take about 17 feet of the highway. This and other details were stated by Dr. Fuller. Arthur D. Norcross, chairman of the board of selectmen, spoke in behalf of the town, arguing that when sometime in the the early sixties the road was relaid from South Monson it was widened wherever possible at considerable expense, and it seems like going backward rather than forward to make a main street out of a town narrower rather than wider. He said also that in all probability Monson would have more state highway this year, and that the state commission was not in favor of narrow roads; also that the petition for a franchise by the electric railway company included this strip, and that a sidewalk was among the things to be considered. George C. Flynt replied that the Flynts would give enough land on the west for a sidewalk if necessary. R. M. Reynolds said that as Monson was to receive a most desirable gift, and as the cemetery commissioners had looked the matter over very carefully and as a sidewalk would be provided for, it would seem advisable to grant the petition. Mr. Reynolds did not wish to be understood as favoring the narrowing of a highway on general principles, however. The chairman of the county commissioners then stated that according to the statutes if there was opposition to a petition the commissioners would have to decide whether the relocating of a road would be for the public convenience and necessity. If so a second hearing would be given, and plans for the relaying would be in order. The decision of the commissioners has not yet been made known.

Two Runaways.

T. J. Hynes' horse, attached to a long wagon and standing in front of Squier & Co's. grain mill last Saturday afternoon, took himself down Squier avenue and across Green street at a lively rate. He fairly skated the last 20 feet, and brought up against a fence, wedging the wagon between the fence and a tree. Freeing himself he ran down Green street and was stopped by his owner at Lincoln street. The horse, wagon and harness were all more or less injured.

On Monday Solomon Pierce's horse felt decidedly kinky and ran down Spring street, Flynt avenue and Pleasant street, back to High street to about the point from where he started, leaving the buggy and its occupants by the roadside on the last-named street. One of the persons thrown out was somewhat hurt and was carried into a house to recover. The wagon was, at last accounts, still lying near the road.

Excellent Financial Showing at St. Patrick's Church.

The financial report of St. Patrick's parish was given to the congregation Sunday. The report shows about $1300 spent on improvements, and $1000 paid on the debt. The mortgage on the church has been cancelled. There remains a debt of $4750 on the house and $3000 on the Chaffee property, purchased this year. Winter asserted its rights Saturday and Sunday, and on Monday was in its glory. It is reported that on that morning at South Monson the mercury had dropped 22 degrees below "nothin';" 18° and 19° below were not uncommon quotations, and in spite of rousing fires water pipes froze and the services of the plumbers were necessary before they could be thawed out. At No. 8 and No. 15 primary schools the rooms were so cold that it was not considered safe to hold sessions, and the children were sent home.

The following pupils have been neither absent nor tardy from No. 1 primary school during the month ending Jan. 3: Kate Cushman, Nellie Kennedy, Gertrude Leary, Hazel Moore, Edward Faulkner, Clinton Grant, George Matros, Willie Matros, George Mitchell, John Peterson. In the No. 1 intermediate school: Florence Crocker, Annie Fitzgerald, Louise Moore, Mary Purcell, Grace Thayer, Margaret Looney, Katie Looney, Dennis Cahill, James Fitzgerald, Henry Hale, Peter Kearns, Thomas Mack, Thomas Purcell. In the Green street primary: Ethel Day, Mabel Fuller, May Pendergast, Willie Babbitt, John Cantwell, Arthur Connelly, Howard Gath, Frank Gath, Eddie Hanley, Willie Hanson, Raymond Holloway, Herbert Howe, Henry Neville.

At the annual meeting of the Congregational church, held last evening, these officers were elected: Clerk, Mrs. C. C. Keep; treasurer, Edward F. Morris; deacon for six years, A. H. White; church committee, pastor, deacons, superintendent of Sunday school, president of Y. P. S. C. E., also Rev. James Tufts, E. M. Walker, J. M. Hall, Frank E. Morris, Mrs. W. N. Flynt and Miss Maybelle Anderson. Sunday school officers: Assistant superintendent, Chas. C. Keep; secretary, L. C. Flynt; treasurer, Edward F. Morris; librarian, F. D. Rogers; superintendent of primary department, Miss L. H. Walker; superintendent of home department, Miss Louise Morris; executive committee, C. C. Keep, J. W. Hall, A. H. White, A. D. Norcross, F. D. Many anecdotes have been related of animals showing remarkable intelligence, but Henry Pain has a horse 23 years old which is noted for knowing when the bell rings for services Sunday morning. When Zip is harnessed and left in the yard without being hitched, she will stand quietly until the bell begins to ring for meeting, when she will start off on a brisk trot and will not stop until she reaches the church door, where she will stand until someone takes her to the horse shed.

The residents of the community were nearly scared out of their wits Sunday night. About 8 o'clock someone drove at breakneck speed through the main street screaming "Fire! Clayton Felton and his sister Minnie had a narrow escape Sunday evening. While driving down Main street the front axle broke, which threw both out on the hard-frozen ground, the horse going down the street upon a keen run with the shafts and one wheel attached. He was stopped about a quarter of a mile beside the road. Miss Felton received slight scratches on the face. The wagon was badly smashed.

A good illustration of human feeling was seen in the efforts which were enlisted one day last week in the rescue from drowning of Capt. F. D. Lincoln's shepherd dog, "Fido." The dog had followed A. G. Tarbell on his way to the woods beyond the mill pond, but having a marked aversion to the sound of felling trees, had started for home as usual, when the vicinity of the woods was reached. His shortest course lay across the mill pond, which at that time was frozen over to the thickness of about an inch, except in the middle, where no ice had formed. Here the dog got in, and had probably been in the water half an hour when Edward Wood called the attention of F. E. Brown, who was at work in his saw mill, to the animal's cries. Finding out what the trouble was the too men took a boat, which lay at the south shore of the pond, and made their way, breaking the ice before them, to the spot where the dog was struggling in the water. The boat came near upsetting, and Mr. Brown ran some risk from exposure, but Fido was brought safely to land. He was too weak to stand however, and was carried into the house of John Needham, where he was rolled in blankets placed by the fire. In the meantime William Daniels, who also lives near the pond, having seen the dog's pitiful conditon when taken from the boat, had hurried off to Capt. Lincoln's to report the accident. He returned with a team and carried Fido, greatly revived by the care he had received, to his anxious owners. The dog kept close indoors the following day, but has shown no serious effects from his icy bath.

Death of a Life-Long and Respected Resident.

In the death of John W. Browning, which occurred on Monday, the town has lost another life-long resident and citizen who was held in high esteem by his fellow townsmen. About four years ago Mr. Browning had a partial stroke of paralysis, which left him in feeble health; during most of the time since he has been able to preform light tasks, and until recently to walk daily to the post office. Last Friday he was prostrated by a paralytic stroke, and remained in an unconscious condition up to the time of his death.

John Warriner Browning was born in Brimfield July 8, 1811, and had thus reached the middle of his eighty-fifth year. He was the son of Joseph Davis Browning, and grandson of Capt. Joseph Browning. The latter was an officer in the Revolution, and his name appears in the Brimfield records as one of the foremost in forwarding those measures which were taken by the town preparatory to the war. Although the tastes of the grandson, John Browning, did not lie in the direction of leadership in affairs, his personality was felt as a positive and gracious influence by the people among whom he lived his long and useful life. He possessed an unusually sympathetic and social nature, and at the same time he was a man of firm principles and independent convictions. He was devoted to the interests of his family and kind to an unusual degree, and he was a kind neighbor and a liberal citizen. His creed was substantially a belief in the fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man. Says a contemporary who knew him from his youth up: "Too much of good cannot be said about John Browning." An interesting incident of his boyhood days is related as illustrating very early the refinement and politeness that were seen throughout his life: A group of boys were playing on the common when some strangers drove past. Some of the boys shouted in none too respectful fashion at the passersby. "Boys, where are your manners?" said John Browning, rebuking their rudeness in a quiet way. "He was the best brought up boy I knew," the narrator of the above story adds. When a young man Mr. Browning learned the currier's trade while employed by the leather manufacturing firm of P. Warren & Sons of Brimfield. He also worked at this trade in Brookfield. Later in life he carried on the currying business for himself, occupying for that purpose a portion of the former tannery building, which he purchased and moved to its present location south of his house. He employed a number of hands, and carried on a prosperous business for a good-many years, until the introduction of machinery made the process of currying leather by hand was profitable. This industry carried on by Mr. Browning was the latest to survive of the numerous and varied occupations which in earlier years made Brimfield an active business center.

Mr. Browning was married in 1839 to Miss Olive Baker, who died in 1856, leaving two daughters. He was afterwards married to Miss Phebe Spring, who survives him. Neither of his daughters is living, but he leaves three grandchildren, Ernest B. Smith of Orange, Cal., Louis Smith of Warren, and Miss Clara Goodhue, whose home for the past four years has been with her grandparents in Brimfield.

Death of John W. Chadsey.

John W. Chadsey, 64, resident agent of the Knowles steam pump works, died at his home on Sunday. Mr. Chadsey was born in Wickford, R. I., April 2, 1831, and attended the public schools there until he was 14. He learned the jeweler's trade, and was for a time employed in Worcester. Mr. Chadsey came to Warren about 1850 as bookkeeper for Knowles & Sibley, woolen manufacturers. When L. J. Knowles patented the Knowles steam pump, Mr. Chadsey was made business manager, and from that time until his death he held the same position. He was also resident agent of the Knowles steam-pump works. He shrank from town office, and only served once as selectman in 1867, but was often a member of important committees.

In politics he was an ardent Republican, and had been chairman of the town committee for years. He was always a delegate to the state republican conventions, and only last week attended the inauguration exercises of Governor Greenhalge at Boston. He was one of the founders of the Warren savings bank, and had been its president since its incorporation in 1882. He had also been closely connected with the public library, being president of the board of directors and treasurer at the time of his death. He has been a large contributor to its welfare. He was president of the Warren building and improvement company and its largest stockholder. He was also president of the board of trade, a member of the thief detecting society and an honorary member of the Worcester Continentals. Mr. Chadsey was a member of the Congregational church, and always present at its meetings. He was chairman of the parish committee of the church, and was always doing something to make the church more useful and attractive. Only a few years ago he built an addition for the primary department at his own expense.

Mr. Chadsey leaves a widow and daughter Edith, two grandchildren at Newton, a brother in Providence, R. I., and one in Brooklyn, N. Y., and two sisters in Wickford.

The townspeople were much shocked Monday morning when the news of the sudden death of Mr. Chadsey became generally known. Having been connected with the Knowles steam pump works as its resident agent since its incorporation in town, he was closely in touch with all the interests of the town, for he was a loyal townsman—Warren and its interests were ever dear to his heart. And such a generous heart! Whatever the cause which came to his notice, he was always ready to give with a generous hand. Was there any enterprise which would aid in the growth and prosperity of the town, he was always ready to give it a substantial backing. To give was to him a pleasure. He will be missed at the pump works, where he was so well liked; in financial circles, where his influence was so potent; in the political party of which he was such a strong adherent; in the library association, of which he was president, and to which he has been a most liberal donor, sparing no expense to make the library and reading room pleasant and cheery and well-equipped; in the Congregational church, whose interests have ever held so large a share in his life; in the Sunday school, of which he has been superintendent for eighteen years. Nothing that it was in his power to do or give that would add to the attractiveness or usefulness of these has he left unsupplied. The beautiful room for the infant department, which he took so much pleasure in fitting up, will always be a reminder of his love for the little ones. He will be missed in the home, where a wife and daughter will so miss the indulgent husband and father; among a wide circle of friends at home and abroad, who will miss the genial, kindly friend who seemed such a part of the town. A legal citizen, a considerate employer, a generous benefactor,—of whom it might be said "Freely he had received, freely he gave." His going will leave many empty places to be filled.

Salt Rheum

And Impure Blood Cured, says Mrs. Pierce of

AMHERST, MASS.

Mr. Geo. B. Pierce and his mother, proprietors of the Amherst, Mass., Creamery Association, relates the following experience: "For a long time I suffered from Salt Rheum," said Mrs. Pierce, "but about two years ago I slipped and hurt my knee, which made it worse. I can't begin to tell the agony I was in, my limbs became a mass of raw flesh covered with running sores. My friends would say I could not live long, and I thought so too. Well, I heard of Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy and Dr. David Kennedy's Salt Rheum Cream; I commenced using them, and in three weeks I walked out of doors. Last night I walked a mile, and I am sixty-three years of age. It shows that and Salt Rheum Cream can do more than the physicians, for they made me well after my doctor told me I was incurable. I must also tell you of another preparation Dr. Kennedy advised me to use, which did as much for me. It was Dr. David Kennedy's Cherry Balsam. I have had a wretched cough for the past fifteen years, the best doctors in the state united in saying that it was incurable, and that it was only a matter of time before my lungs would give out—my sleep was restless, I would lie awake for hours. I well recollect the first time I used Dr. Kennedy's Cherry Balsam. It relieved my throat at once, and I slept all through that night, the first full night's rest I had in several years. It seemed like a miracle. I took but two bottles and was cured.

Dr. David Kennedy's Cherry Balsam cures asthma, bronchitis, coughs, colds, incipient consumption, whooping cough or croup. Taken with Favorite Remedy, it never fails. Price 25c, 50c, and $1 a bottle. Dr. David Kennedy's Salt Rheum Cream is sold at 50c a package. Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy costs $1 a bottle or six bottles for $5.00.

Favorite Remedy ranks with the medical profession as the most perfect of all blood and nerve medicines. It restores the liver to a healthy condition, and cures constipation. It is a certain cure for all diseases peculiar to women, and affords protection from attacks that originate in change of life. It cures scrofula, salt rheum, tumors, rheumatism, dyspepsia, all kidney, bladder and urinary diseases, gravel, diabetes and Bright's disease. In this last disease it has cured where all else failed.

Fixing The Clock.

It's just as fawther said it was—they's somethin' here that's wrong;
The gran'ther clock is ailin', sir—we're glad you come along.
It stood an' sulked a week or two, an' wouldn't tick or ring,
Or run its hau's aroun' its face, or do a blessed thing.

It's old enough to hav a rest, as people say, you know;
We often think it started out a thousan' years ago.
An' Cousin Peter, who sets an' tells us stories in the dark,
He wonders ef it give the time for Noarh in the ark.

We're glad it's goin' to start ag'in! for when it ain't no good,
It makes a sort o' friendly fuss all through the neighborhood;
The folks inquire as if 'twas folks, an' stop us on the way,
An' anxiously they ask us how the ol' clock is today.

They's lots o' time-machines aroun' that have a deal o' lack,
An' need a steady gran'ther clock to keep 'em on the track;
I've seen folks stan' out in the road, an' wait an' listen like,
To set their watch by this 'ere clock, as soon's they heard it strike.

We're glad it stopped, though: so's that you could take it all apart,
An' we could see its thinkin'-works, an' where it kep' its heart;
An' why, before it's goin' to strike, four minutes an' a half,
It sort o' up an chuckles, like, as ef it meant to laugh;

An' how it keeps its memory good, although it's got so old,
An' how it knows the moon is new, or full o' yeller gold;
An' tells it with its picture-moons, so's we can know it nigh
As well as ef we went out-door an' found it in the sky;

An' ef it ever has the blues, alone there night an' day,
An' how it came to know the facts, when baby went away;
For half the night there through the dark a cryin' in our bed,
We heerd it talkin' to itself—"She's dead—she's dead—she's dead!"

An' then I guess I went to sleep, an' dreamed a little while,
An' thought I saw her in the clouds, an' knew her by her smile;
An' when the sunrise woke me up—'twas maybe six or seven—
It changed its mind, an' says to me, "In Heaven—in Heaven—in Heaven!"

ORIGINAL.

EPHEMERAL AND PERENNIAL.

There was a time when meadow, grove, and stream,
The earth, and every common sight,
To me did seem
Apparel'd in celestial light,
The glory and the freshness of a dream.
It is not now as it hath been of yore;
Turn whereso'er I may,
By night or day,
The things which I have seen, I now can see no more.
—Wordsworth.

As I sit by my study fire on this fine day, my eye rests on the picture of a beautiful walk and alcove of branching elms where I used to walk and meditate in days of professional study, long ago. It was beautiful then, before those trees had grown to their present majestic hight, and before the architect had done so much to adorn the walk and surrounding objects; but it is more beautiful now.

Whatever decadence there may be in our view of things, it must be chiefly in ourselves rather than in the things themselves. As the poet elsewhere puts it:

"Fallings from us, vanishings,
Blank misgivings of a creature."

Sir Walter Scott touches this point very plaintively in his lines on Weirdlow Hill, after his own mental powers began to grow:

"The quiet lake, the balmy air,
The hill, the stream, the tower, the tree,—
Are they still such as once they were?
Or is the dreary change in me?"

Alas! it was in him, almost entirely; and yet the memory of these bright days was still fresh and green in his heart, as the poem clearly shows.

Some one has said very truly, "We get from nature, from books, and from persons in proportion to what we take them." And this is largely true, whether in things that are beautiful and good or those of an opposite character. The change that Wordsworth saw was not so vital as in the case of Scott, as the predominant spirit shows. It was only that had vanished in him, while in Scott it went down to the very depth of his being.

Much depends on the physical condition in this matter, but more on the physical and intellectual state. What we take to a subject, by our own character and choice, determines largely what we shall see in it and receive from it. For example, one who reads the 34th or 59th chapter of Isaiah and lays down the Book without glancing into the 35th or 60th chapter, becomes a pessimist and says the world is becoming more more corrupt and ready for the consuming fire. But if he reads on regardless of artificial division of chapter and verse, he finds at the end of the view, as in the picture before me, a beautiful and complete blending of natural and spiritual things, wrought by the Divine Artist in harmony with the laws which underlie and permeate all things.

Not only are many things that once were deemed good passing away, but others are coming on to fill their places and expel the errors and evils of the past. "The Expulsive Powers of a New Affection" is not the mere title of an eloquent sermon by the great Scotch preacher, Dr. Thomas Chalmos, but a veritable and scriptural principle of a world-wide application and force.

"Let knowledge grow from more to more,
But more of reverence in us dwell,
That mind and soul according dwell
May make one music as before,
But vaster.

Waterloo, Iowa. —M. K. CROSS.

NEW USE OF THE BLOOMER.—A small boy has discovered a new beauty of the bloomer that has heretofore gone unseen. A lady bicyclist was riding out Third street the other day clad in the bloomer costume, provoking some comment among the passers-by, but everybody in hearing was paralyzed when she passed a couple of small boys and one of them exclaimed: "Gee whiz, wouldn't them be fine things to steal apples in? You could just chuck 'em on both sides, and carry away a peck in each leg!"—Louisville Commercial.

Mrs. Jackson Park (at a Chicago wedding)—"The bride has been married before, hasn't she?" Mrs. Gunnison Dearborn—"Oh, yes This is her fifth inning."—Judge.

Marvelous Results.

From a letter written by Rev. J. Gundermann, of Dimondale, Mich., we are permitted to make this extract: "I have no hesitation in recommending Dr. King's New Discovery, as the results were almost marvelous in the case of my wife. While I was pastor of the Baptist church at Rivers Junction she was brought down with pneumonia succeeding la grippe. Terrible paroxysms of coughing would last hours with little interruption, and it seemed as if she could not survive them. A friend recommended Dr. King's New Discovery; it was quick in its work and highly satisfactory in results." Trial bottles free of LeGro & Lynde, Palmer; G. L. Keeney, Monson; F. A. Spencer, Ware. Regular size 50c and $1.00.

Electric Bitters.

Electric Bitters is a medicine suited for any season, but perhaps more generally needed in the spring, when the languid exhausted feeling prevails, when the liver is torpid and sluggish and the need of a tonic and alterative is felt. A prompt use of the medicine has often averted long and perhaps fatal bilious fevers. No medicine will act more surely in counteracting and freeing the system from the malarial poison. Headache, indigestion, consumption, dizziness yield to Electric Bitters. Only fifty cents per bottle of LeGro & Lynde, Palmer; G. L. Keeney, Monson; F. A. Spencer, Ware.

Bucklen's Arnica Salve.

THE BEST SALVE in the world for cuts bruises, sores, ulcers, salt rheum, fever sores, tetter, chapped hands, chilblains, corns, and all skin eruptions, and positively cures piles, or no pay required. It is guaranteed to give perfect satisfaction or money refunded. Price 25 cents per box. For sale by LeGro & Lynde, Palmer; G. L. Keeney, Monson; F. A. Spencer, Ware.

WHISKERS AND CHARACTER.

"I don't know a greater shock," said the young woman thoughtfully, when the front door had closed after Mamo and we were together on the veranda—"hardly that of seeing what illness has done to the face—than coming upon a man whom we have always known with a mustache or beard and finding him with none. Sides of his character we never suspected, weaknesses of will that have always been hidden, are suddenly laid bare. I sometimes think," she added, laughing, "that a full long beard to many a man is like a vine to a crumbling wall—a provision of nature to cover that which otherwise could not have been relied upon. Without his beard, how many a patriarch would be revealed the despot, how many a philanthropist the selfish schemer! For, after all, it is the lower part of the face that reveals the man you meet every day. You get his intellect, the qualities he exercises consciously, his power to think and plan, all in the upper part of the face. This may be fine, almost Greek in line and proportion, but the lower part of the face is the text to a man's nature; his refinement, his origin even, are all written there."—Harper's Bazar.

Two Churches.

On a stately street, in a beautiful town
By history clothed with fair renown,
Where Poverty jostled the step of pride,
Two churches were standing side by side.

The first was of marble grand and tall,
With lofty pillars and spacious hall,
And lo, from the height of her gilded dome
A musical chime called wanderers home,

And told them in notes of melody sweet
That just below, on a cushioned seat,
They might rest their weary forms and pray
For light to guide them on their way.

But this must be done in the proper style,
And the preacher would, with an unctuous smile,
Help all the sinners to beds of ease
With little soil to immaculate knees—

And just a moderate number of sighs,
But no lamenting or weeping eyes;
The old-time gospel is out of date—
It wasn't quite pleasant to contemplate.

For what would a modern Christian do
If he couldn't serve God and Mammon too?
The world is growing so wise you see,
That religion is not what it used to be.

Geologists tell us earth's age is shown
By a strange development of stone,
And with hammer and chisel they chip away
At the Bible tale of the night and day,

While skeptics sneer and infidels smile,
But the nails of God grind on the while;
And the Rock of Ages says to man—
Geologize me away if you can!

One day there stood in the great church door
A woman, unlearned and old and poor;
And she wept as she gazed in sorrowful way
At those cushioned seats where sinners might pray.

Her clothing had caught the dust of the street—
No shoes to cover her weary feet—
A tattered shawl around her form
Was scant protection from wind and storm.

And the crowd passed by with haughty stare
The poor old creature lingering there;
And she said to herself, "Oh, can it be
That the Savior died for such as me?

"I heard it once in the long ago,
Before I had sinned and suffered so;
But maybe 'twas just for the rich he came
To die on the cross that death of shame,

"And the poor and wretched are only fit
For the lake of fire and the bottomless pit."
So she stood in a dreary, hopeless way,
A sinsick soul afraid to pray.

And the organ pealed and the singers sang,
And out to the street the chorus rang;
'Twas "Come to me, oh weary soul,
When storm and billows o'er me roll;
I heal the sick, make strong the weak,
The blind shall see, the dumb shall speak;

"The mighty Lord of earth and sky
This day, this hour is passing by.
Oh, lost one, look to Him and live—
He waits to full salvation give."

But just as those glorious tidings brought
The gleam of light she so eagerly sought,
And while she whispered the sweet words o'er,
The sexton came and closed the door.

The other church was shabby and old;
No lofty pillar or dome of gold—
No stately hall with marble floor—
The poor and lowly thronged the door.

And never a diamond flashed or gleamed,
Or stained glass glittered—God's sunshine streamed
Through the humble windows, and falling down,
With golden light their warm rays crown

The snowy locks of the preacher there.
What matters it if the floor is bare?
Or hard and worn the wooden pews,
And all old-fashioned the preacher's views?

No brilliant fancy, no language fine,—
As worldlings deem,—but a breath divine
Seemed stealing over the waiting throng
As they softly, tenderly sang the song:

"Come unto me. Oh sinner, hear—
The bleeding Christ stands ever near.
He calls thee, pause not nor delay,
He is the life, the truth, the way.

"No money bring, nor costly dress—
Ye shall be clothed in righteousness.
Come unto me. 'Tis He who said
I have not where to lay my head."

Out rang the song into the street,
And drew those weary, frost-chilled feet
Up to the humble open door,
Where sad hearts oft had paused before,

But ne'er in vain. The sexton's eye
Was following her as she passed by;
He saw the tear-stained, care-worn face,
Where grief and sin had left their trace,

And with a kindly, pitying smile
He led her through the narrow aisle,
While walked beside them, all unseen,
The form of the lowly Nazarene.

Ah, little church, so old and plain
That worldly souls would scarcely deign
To kneel at thy humble altar-side,
Thou art Immanuel's chosen bride.

Thou hast no chime or silvery bell
To greet the birth or toll the knell;
There in thy tower a worn-out form
Hangs mute amid the sun and storm;

Long years ago its voice was stilled.
My eyes to-day with tears are filled
As I recall its olden song—
Ah, sweet the notes it did prolong!

Our fathers hastened at its call—
Our mothers heard its music fall—
And when time hushed its glad refrain,
The angel choir took up the strain.

All Hail, thou temple of the King!
Thy children wear the signet ring.
Arise and shine until thy light
Illumines dark earth's darkest night—

Destroy the skeptic's fatal snare,
Luring its victims to despair;
Be thou hope's beacon on life's sea,
And shipwrecked souls shall cling to thee
Till, all life's storm and conflict past,
They make the harbor safe at last.

MRS. CHARLES G. THOMPSON.

Monson, Mass.

MARJORIE'S WEDDING JOURNEY.

It was the day before the one appointed for the marriage ceremony. Marjorie Tate, the soon-to-be bride, was in her own room in the full enjoyment of receiving gifts. Her older, married and fashionable sister who, five years before had gone through the same rush of preparation to meet the "dear five hundred" guests, now lounged and criticised indifferently from the depths of an easy chair, Lilias Crombie, first bridesmaid, and only one season "out," was ecstatic.

"Here is another butter knife, the fifth, isn't it, Marjorie? Flossie Farwell had sixteen sugar spoons, and sixty-eight souvenir spoons. Another orange spoon; You and Mr. Lathrop will need a steady diet of that fruit to give all a turn."

"When I was married," came a voice from the easy chair, "our presents were all on exhibition, and mine just filled a room. I thought it was very fine then, but they're only a nuisance now. And, do your best, somebody'll be sure to have something more elegant before the year is out."

"Here's something, Marjorie, unique at least. Looks as though it had come from the last century," and Lilias held out to her friend a small, old-fashioned envelope, directed in a cramped chirography.

"Whom in the world can this be from, mamma?" Marjorie asked of the sweet-faced matron who had joined the group.

"Open, dearie, and see," with the tender ring to her words mothers give who are sending their daughters half a continent away from them.

"Sure enough, you most sensible mamma! Oh! it is Aunt Hannah, your auntie, mamma; and I have not seen her since I was a little girl! Here's the letter:

Dear Grand Niece:—When I received the invitation to your wedding (did you send one, thoughtful mamma?) it caused me to realize how the years are passing by with us. Your dear mother, whom I knew and cared for as a little girl, is now turning toward the evening (I presume Aunt Hannah thinks of you as wearing caps, O lovely mamma!) and her daughters are assuming responsibilities of active life.

I have boxed and forwarded to you a small wheel upon which your great grandmother spun the linen for many hundred yards of sheeting and table cloths. They tell me girls consider them great curiosities now-a-days. I know many girls think the time of their wedding and honeymoon a time to drop out of all duties, and thought for others. I hope you are not that kind. I wish you joy in your new relation.

Years ago I invited you to visit me on your wedding journey. It would give you pleasure to come and see a plain old woman in the home of your mother's childhood, I should be glad to welcome you and your husband here. With love to your mother and family. Your affectionate aunt."

HANNAH GIBSON.

"The idea!" from the easy chair.

"What a funny letter!" from the girl on the floor. Marjorie's eyes were thoughtful.

"Am I that kind of a girl, mamma?" she asked quietly, and just then her hand touched the silver cross at her waist. She had put that on while away at school, and wore it in sight still in spite of protests.

"Where are you going?" came now from the easy chair. "Newport, I suppose first, of course, to the Harriman fete. Then where? We went abroad, you know. That was the fad then. I didn't care where. All I wanted was to be where Henry was. We had our first quarrel in Venice That was the end of the honeymoon, I suppose. All honeymoons end somewhere."

"Do they, mamma?" Marjorie said softly. She liked to think things were going to last and to believe in things with her whole heart.

All day Marjorie went about among the busy preparations with a questioning, thoughtful air.

"Bierce," she said that night as the lovers lingered in the aisle of palms that was to be the bridal way, "Where are we going?"

"Where you wish, of course," was the answer.

Then she read her letter, adding, "Now it would make Aunt Hannah happy to see us there, and, Bierce, it does not seem quite right that our wedding journey, when I am so happy myself, should be the only time I have not thought for others."

The earnest, manly face was grave now.

"Thank you, dearest. You are right. I, too, have friends among the New England hills to whom I am under obligations, and I have thought many times that simply because I had become a man, and a successful one, too, it seemed rather shabby, to say the least, to give them the go by so entirely. I'd like to show them the prize I have won. Will you go there, too?"

So it was settled, at last. But only the two young people and Mr. and Mrs. Tate, who were "country born," were let into the secret. To the rest of the world they were going "cousining."

One good-sized trunk was packed with serviceable but pretty and dainty things. "For," as mamma Tate remarked, "no one will appreciate them more than those whose eyes are not surfeited with shop windows all the time.

The simple but grand service at the floral altar was over, the concealed musicians had rendered the wedding march; showers of rice had pattered upon the carriage top; and at last, they were off and alone, to begin the problem of a new Saxon home.

It was drawing toward the close of the second day after, that a fair, elderly face, framed in by snowy hair, looked out with expectant gaze from the doorway of a plain little home up among the hills. The soft September sunlight lay with a golden glory upon the rich green of late meadowland, on yellow brown of grain stubble, or set, like brilliant bouquets and flaming sumach, against more somber hues of elderbush or fringing willow.

A telegram the day before had told of coming guests, and Aunt Hannah with her faithful Abigail had been busy in the loving preparation.

"It's so kind of Anna's girl to think of an old woman like me," she had said. "I never expected it of her, but if she is her mother's own daughter and not just what the fashionable city has made of her, there must be something to her."

"I do hope they will find something here worth while," she murmured.

"There is the 'peace of the hills' at any rate; yea, and its strength too."

"Phineas," she told her 'man of all work' at noon, "you may fasten Kitty to the low carriage and let Joey's boy go in it, while you take the light wagon for the trunk." Then the boy can ride back with you and leave the young people to themselves. They will like that best."

So the "young people" were riding up now through the glory of the sunlight and color, jumping out for golden-rod or crimson branch or russet bough, until gentle Kitty and the low carriage looked like one great moving bouquet.

"But what in the world they can find pretty in them air weeds," Phineas declared; forgetting the day that he had pinned on a bunch of "silver weed," at Abigail's throat, saying that her eyes shone so bright he could not see but it was roses.

Aunt Hannah's smile welcomed them, "weeds and all," and they were soon seated, with the sharpest of appetites, at the solid, round table with the claw feet, that Marjorie's great-grandfather had set up housekeeping with; spread, too, with the finest of linens cloths that had been spun and woven by the faraway bride of a hundred years before. They sipped their fragrant tea from cups more dainty and fragile than any in their city home, while they listened to the story of the great-greataunt, who, at nineteen, had purchased these for her own bridal, and then, before the day appointed, had buckled the sword to her lover's side and sent him out under Washington's command to die on Southern soil. The fat little silver tea-pot and creamer had been brought from Holland by some ancestral refugee. When the sun went down upon them sitting there, Marjorie remarked:

"This is the loveliest 'five-o'clock tea,' Aunt Hannah, that I ever attended. I feel as though I were dressed up in modern clothes, but set back into part of a picture spoons. What stories of tea drinkings I seem to hear them tell. And it is so quiet here, Aunt Hannah. It must be easy to hear the good word up here."

"I often wonder," said the soft voice of the elder lady" that more, of our city people do not frequently take a few days, even one or two, for the country quiet. They would find God's word in the stillness; a voice of guiding such as Elijah of old heard on the mountain side. Many an answer waits for those who will lay their ear close to the heart of Nature and ask it."

After this came a day of fishing with Joey's boy for guide, and a long ride after gentle Kitty, with the discovery of as many wonders as Rome offers.

On the perfect Sabbath they attended the village church, and as they tarried in the large porch, Aunt Hannah, with simple country custom, introduced her young guests to one and another, who gave such cordial welcome to "Anna's girl" as quite won the daughter's heart. There had been pure and sweet music; there were dresses as simply elegant as Marjorie's own; there were faces of culture and refinement. In her heart she hoped to find favor for her mother's sake.

"I thank you so much for inviting me here," the young bride said at parting. "I shall never, never forget my lovely time."

"Dear child," Aunt Hannah returned, "you have done me a great good in coming. Life will seem broader to me now. I shall have more interest in the busy world where you too are going to take an active place and work for God and humanity. The blessing of the old follows you now, dearie."

"I felt as though a hand were laid upon my head," Marjorie said to her mother in the tale of those happy days.

After a little lingering by the way another Saturday found them near her Cousin Jonas.'

"I cannot promise you much here," Bierce said. "They have buried all their children and are left alone in an out-of-the-way place. But twelve years ago I was suspended from college for hazing, and sent here, and their words then made a man of me. I feel that I owe them a great deal. So bear with it, dear, for the memory of that good."

It was only a plain open wagon with "spring seat," and room behind for the trunk, that met them this time, and Cousin Jonas, who drove, was aged and bowed, yet the kindly eyes and soft voice had won Marjorie's heart long before the three-mile climb up hill after hill had brought them to the bare, one-story house, with its well and long sweep at the side. Cousin Mary, thin and angular, welcomed them briefly.

"I am glad to see Hulbert's boy and his wife," she said, and ushered them into the prim, stiff parlor, that made the girl's fingers ache to change it.

"You'll find it lonesome here. It didn't use to be," with a glance two miles away to where, on another hilltop, marble headstones were outlined against the western sun, "but our family are all gone now, but father and me."

"How many had you?" Marjorie asked softly.

"Six; three boys and three girls. Three of them lived to between twelve and eighteen, and all died of consumption. Two went together at six and eight, of scarlet fever, and one a baby. I've thought sometimes that was hardest of all.

"She was so small, she didn't seem to have grown very far away from my heart at all. It was hard, but 'twas the Lord's doings and they were His, of course."

"And they're all waiting," her husband put in softly.

"Yes, they won't get into trouble," and with another look that was a "good night," the mother turned away to other things.

"How sad it seems, Bierce," the young wife said that night, "but I like them."

"Yes, they are good. But I fancy there is some more trouble than we see. Cousin Jonas has two or three times this evening spoken of bringing new trouble to Mary. They are lovers still, Marjorie. Do you suppose we shall be, after living together fifty-two years?"

It was rainy the next morning and no one went to church, but in the afternoon the sun came out and Bierce went out for a long walk with Cousin Jonas. When he came back he seemed restless and eager until he got his bride to himself.

"What did you do all the afternoon?" he asked then.

"Studied missionary magazines with Cousin Mary," Marjorie answered promptly. 'I never learned so much of missionary matters in all my life. Cousin Mary is at home in every corner of the earth, instead of being shut into this isolated place. When we settle down in our own home, Bierce, I shall find a place for such things. What did you do?"

"Found out Cousin Jonas's trouble."

"What is it?"

"Money, of course. Their last two children died twenty years ago. They were sick for years, and Cousin Mary a long time, too, and the expenses were so heavy they had to mortgage the farm. The interest of that has crippled them for everything since, and now they cannot even meet that. Cousin Jonas says it must go, the home where he was born, where he lived all his life, the home to which he brought his bride, where his children were born, and where they went away from, must all go in a few weeks now."

"But you will not let it, Bierce."

"Bless you, Marjorie, I knew you would say that."

"Bierce, the diamond pendant you promised me is too useless when there are such real needs in the world. Will you take that?"

Before breakfast the next morning Bierce Lathrop rode rapidly on horseback down to the village station and sent a telegram to the metropolis, two hundred miles distant.

"I asked father to telegraph two thousand dollars to the bank here before ten o'clock. It will be there, never fear. I will have Cousin Jonas on hand and it will not take long to settle the matter in any way he pleases. If he insists on turning the mortgage over to me, I will lay it out in repairs, and they shall have every comfort for the remainder of their days. I will be as good as their son to them."

It was all done as he said, and they were back after keeping dinner waiting for an hour. But the young people will never forget how Cousin Jonas, before he sat down to the table, went around behind his wife, and laying some papers upon her plate said, with voice tremulous with deep emotion:

"It is all right now, Mary. We are never to leave the dear home while God spares our lives. Let us thank Him and our young cousins for this great gift."

A little later the "young cousins" went away. A fall chill had crept into the air, so "father" could not carry them to the train, but the "hired man" sat on the trunk in front and the young people had the seat. Cautious Billy picked his way carefully down the stony road, and the departing guests turned back for one more look.

In the low doorway Cousin Jonas and the wife of more than a golden circle of years stood together, hand in hand. Their white locks were lifted softly by the breeze from pale and wrinkled faces, but in the faded eyes shone the light of a love that knows only eternal youth.

At last a curve in the road shut off the old homestead and the waiting figures from sight, and Marjorie turned.

"Oh, Bierce, can I ever be thankful enough that I was not left to lose one of the very best times of my life!"—Howe Benning.

THE PASSION OF MONEY-GETTING.

Rev. Charles H. Parkhurst, D. D., in writing of "The Passion of Money-Making" in December Ladies Home Journal says, concerning the prevalent idea regarding the value of an education to boys: "We are considering the effect which is going to be had upon the boy by being led to feel that the value of his training, whether it be obtained in a business college or in any other kind of a college, is determinable by the amount in cash, stocks and securities in which it may be expected ultimately to eventuate. That is an indirect—but none the less effective for being indirect—way of telling the boy that money is so transcendently great a thing that the only value that anything else can have its efficiency in contributing to that end. It is an indirect way of telling him that the only value of an idea, the only value of a mental energy, the only value of a disciplined brain, in fact, is its cash value; which amounts substantially to listing intelligence and putting it upon the market in mercantile competition with wheat, leather and railroad stock. Of course there is no such intention as this on the part of parents when they hurry their sons into the store or the banking-house or onto the exchange, but the effect just stated comes, is bound to come, and is damning in its consequences."

Foreboding.

I should be so lonely without you, dear.
Why, even now, if you be not here
For the shortest day, there's a certain lack
Which does not vanish till you come back;
And if you were gone forever, dear,
The aching throat and the hot, swift tear
Were a feeble vent, and a futile, due
To the aching absence, dear, of you.

I should be so lonely without you, dear;
Kiss me again, so I know you're near.
If I should reach for the old embrace
And my arms should close on a formless space,
In the midst of the world and its hollow cheer,
In the gayest throng, I should thrill with fear,
The fear of the void which the world would be,
If you were gone from the earth and me.

I should be so lonely without you, dear,
Though I still might heed the passing year,
Though I still might toil from sun to sun,
What would it be when the work was done?
You would not see and you could not share,
And who, of the rest, would really care?

And if I were gone and 'twere you were left,
I know your breast were as much bereft;
And though God were good and seraphs near,
If I were away, while you were here,
I should be so lonely without you, dear.
—J. Edmund V. Cooke, in September Chautauquan.

NO SHOT FIRED, NO SCALP LIFTED.

In 1863 the murderous Sioux from the Yellowstone valley pursued a sanguinary course up through the Gallatin valley and into Montana. It was marked by rapine and plunder. They besieged Fort Reno and killed many of its garrison, including a brother of A. K. McClure. They environed Fort Phil Kearney and wiped from the face of the earth every human being whose walls it failed to protect. Then they surrounded Fort C. F. Smith, where 200 Union soldiers found themselves surrounded by more than 1000 death-seeking Indians. Escape seemed impossible. A courier got word of this condition of affairs to Gen. Hancock, who was then stationed at St. Paul, and he sent a message to the governor of Montana at Bozeman, calling upon him to relieve the besieged garrison. The chief executive of the territory of Montana at that time was Green Clay Smith, who, by the way, recently died in Washington, a Baptist clergyman. He had been a member of Congress from Kentucky, but President Lincoln made him territorial governor of Montana. He was seated on the porch of his residence in Bozeman when Hancock's message was handed to him. To a visitor from the East, who was seated by his side, and who is the authority for this narrative, he said: "What in the name of heaven can I do? Fort C. F. Smith is 250 miles away. The country between here and there is filled with Sioux Indians. Our militia force consists exactly of 427 men. Not a one of them could reach Fort C. F. Smith alive. I am absolutely powerless. However, I will send for Col. Howie."

At that time Col. Neil Howie was United States marshal for the territory of Montana. He was a typical frontiersman. He commanded the Montana volunteers, and it has been said of him that "Gen. Sherman might have been at Bozeman City with 5000 troops and the people of the Gallatin could not have escaped the scalping knife of the savage, but Col. Howie, with less than 400 men, protected 100 miles of exposed frontier but a little distance from the hostile tribes."

It was to this man that Gov. Smith addressed himself, handing him Gen. Hancock's dispatch, and saying: "Colonel, we can't do anything for those poor devils in Fort C. F. Smith. We haven't enough men, and those we have couldn't get there. Am I right?"

"No," said Col. Howie, quietly, without any exhibiton of excitement and with the gentle voice of a woman. "There is no trouble about that, governor. We can arrange that matter and still leave the Montana frontier protected. I will need some picked men and a good leader for them. I think Capt. McCabe is best fitted for this undertaking. I will go out and find him."

McCabe was another gentle-voiced man with blue eyes. He did not make much noise. He acted. He said to the governor: "Oh, yes, it is easy enough. But I'll need 40 of the best men that I can select. You can keep the rest of your volunteer force here." Gov. Smith looked at him in amazement. So did the visitor from the East. They both thought he was either insane or a braggart. Gov. Smith said to him, "How in the name of heaven do you expect to raise the siege of Fort C. F. Smith with 40 men when you know that it is surrounded by more than 1000 bloodthirsty Indians and that the country between here and there is covered with thousands more murderous Sioux?"

Said McCabe quietly: "Why, governor, it is easy enough. The Indians know us, and know that we know them better than they know themselves. You folks from the East have an idea that what you call Indian atrocities are simply unmeaning exhibitions of brutality; that scalping, for instance, is simply a form of torture. In that you are mistaken. The Indian believes that no man can go to the happy hunting ground—heaven we call it—who has been deprived of his hair. Their motive in scalping a victim is to carry out fiendish hatred to its utmost by preventing him from having a happy hereafter. Therefore, to deprive the Indian of his scalp is to rob him of his hope of a happy hereafter. My men never kill an Indian without scalping him, and the Indians know that. The 40 men I will select for this expedition are unerring in their aim with the rifle. They can shoot 16 shots in 16 seconds, and every ball means a dead Indian, and every dead Indian means a scalp, and every scalp means a warrior deprived eternally of a chance of ever reaching the happy hunting ground. My 40 men will walk from here to Fort C. F. Smith without firing a shot."

"Incredible!" said Gov. Smith.

"True," said Capt. McCabe.

What was the result?

Forty men walked 250 miles from Bozeman to Fort C. F. Smith. Indians watched them on every side. By days their progress was signaled by columns of smoke, and at night by fire from mountain tops. But not a shot was fired. When they got within sight of Fort C. F. Smith the 1000 Sioux who held the garrison in siege fled, and the 40 frontiersmen from Bozeman marched in and escorted the 200 Union soldiers back to the territorial capital without the loss of a life. Not a shot had been fired. Not a scalp had been lifted.

Jedge, yoh honah," said the defendant, "I ain't got much to say for merse'f."

"It doesn't look as if you could have."

"I done had de tuhkey, an' I didn't buy 'im, but I has 'stenuatin' cuhcumstances ter offah in the consideration of dis here case."

"What are they?"

"De fack dat dis here tuhkey didn't know no bettah dan ter be peram'blatin' 'roun' right undah mah nose jes' between Thanksgivin' an' Christmas. Ef I was obercome, Jedge, by the 'citement ob the moment, I's willing ter ba'h de consequences. FARMERS' INSTITUTE.

Interesting Discussion Regarding the Best Feed for Cows.

The first farmers' institute of the season was held in the court room Tuesday forenoon. There was a very poor attendance, and some delay in the lecture on account of waiting for the farmers to arrive. The speaker was Prof. J. B. Lindsey, of the Amherst Agricultural College. He took for his subject, "How to feed the dairy cow for milk and cream production." The professor came unusually well prepared to give figures to his hearers. He had a number of charts prepared, showing the relative value of various kinds of feed. Prof. Lindsey said that in securing profitable returns from the dairy it must be remembered that feeding is only secondary. A great deal depends upon the quality of the cow, but he did not attempt to touch upon breeding at this time. Still, there is a right and wrong way to feed, and the general principles upon which proper feeding is based should be carefully considered. The body of cows, said he, may be divided into four parts: First, water; second, ash or mineral matter; third, flesh; and fourth, fat. In an average steer the percentage is as follows: Water, 45 per cent.; ash, 9 per cent; fat, 40 per cent; blood, skin and entrails, 24 per cent.

Although certain feeds may contain desirable quantities of the substances required, it does not follow that all are available. Only such part is of use as can be digested by the animal, the remainder passing off in manure. Hay, for instance, is low in protein, while it is rich in carbo-hydrates. It is only about 50 per cent digestible, however, and is therefore not economical. The coarse feeds and roots are the natural production of the farm, and they are of great value for feeding purposes, being very digestible. Most of them are low in protein, but rich in starchy substances. On the other hand the leguminous plants, as clover, peas and beans, are rich in protein and medium in starchy substances. Both these feeds are therefore better than hay or straw. Good pasture grass is a perfect feed for cows, if it can be obtained by them without too much labor. There is so much poor pasturage in New England, however, that this is rarely possible. Wheat and rye are the best early green crops to be had, and clover next. Scarlet clover is earlier than the other variety, but the results are not as good. Vetch and oats, sown as early as possible in the spring, can be cut for fodder early in July and also makes good hay. It is as good as English hay, but there is an objection to vetch, as it requires rich land and plenty of moisture. Peas and oats are also good for green fodder and make good hay. Millet, sown late in May, is an excellent fodder, and is ready for use from the early part of July to the middle of August. Fodder corn can then be used. Peas and barley, sown the first of August, make a splendid fodder from early in October until late in November. The speaker was strongly in favor of the silo. He recommended corn and soja beans as the best sort of ensilage. Medium green soja beans should be sown in drills 2½ feet apart, at the rate of about 18 quarts to the acre. For corns, Longfellow and Pride of the North are recommended for ensilage.

The speaker thought it would not be found profitable to feed large quantities of hay. Concentrated feeds were spoken of, and should be divided into classes, on the basis of protein they contain. Those which have shown the best results were recommended, and from the charts an accurate idea of their relative value could be secured. Experiments have shown that milch cows, of an average weight of 1000 pounds, need for good results, 2½ pounds of digestible protein, half a pound of digestible carbo-hydrates. It is not necessary to weigh the coarse feeds, the practiced eye of a good feeder being all that is necessary. The grain feeds should be weighed, however. Several good examples of grain rations were given, together with the results to be expected from them. The speaker requested that he be interrupted at any time when his hearers wished to ask questions. Some of the farmers found that their experience did not quite agree with the results obtained by the professor's experiments, and frequently took advantage of his offer. The matter was informally discussed, and much additional information gleaned in this way.

The professor is of the opinion that feed has but a slight effect upon the quality of the milk. This depends upon the animal, each cow stamping her own individual product. Very watery feeds tend to produce water in the milk, but this can only be determined by a chemical analysis. The speaker urged the farmers to raise their own cows, and to secure bulls from reputed milk and butter herds for the purpose. He also urged the adoption of the balance and Babcock test to measure the quality and quantity of the milk. Many of the farmers differed from the professor on the statement that the quality of the milk is not affected by the feeds, some of them having had experience to the contrary. The lecture on the whole was very instructive, and many of the suggestions will be given a practical test. The next institute will be held the second Tuesday in February.

BARN AND COW BURNED.

Two Horses also Badly Scorched, and One has to be Shot.

An alarm from box 63 about 10 o'clock yesterday forenoon called the fire department out to a fire in the barn of C. E. Fuller on South Main street. The barn was pretty well gutted, and one cow was cremated; two horses were also burned somewhat before they were gotten out of the fire, one of them being fatally injured. Henry Lovett, Mr. Fuller's man, had just returned from the village, and after lighting the oil heater in his room in the north end of the barn was about his work on the barn floor as usual. After a little time he heard a crackling, and looking around discovered smoke coming through the crevices around the door of his room. He grabbed a pail of water and went to the room, but the inside was all afire, and the water did no good. He at once went to get out the horses, and turned the one farthest from the door out. He then ran across the street and pulled the alarm, and hastened back to the barn. The horse which he had turned out was back in the barn again, and he had hard work to get him out once more, doing so only after the animal had been severely burned about the head and neck. He next got out a two-years-old colt, and then turned his attention to "Pede," Mr. Fuller's driving horse, but the fire was getting close by this time, and the horse was uneasy, and Lovett was kicked across the barn by the animal. He finally succeeded in getting her out of the barn, but not until she had been somewhat burned about the head, though a blanket which she had on protected her body. "Pede" and the other animal which was burned,—a colt nearly five,—were taken to the Weeks House stable, where their burns were dressed by J. H. Woolrich. The fire department was soon on hand after the ringing of the alarm, and had the blaze under control in a short time. A cow which was in the barn could not be gotten out, and two hogs were rescued from the barn cellar after one had laid down, having to be carried out. There was little hay in the barn, and the loss will be principally on the structure,—of which a part of the shell is still standing,—on the cow and two harnesses. This will amount to about $1200, insured as follows: $400 on the building, $250 on tools, $100 on hay and grain, $300 on horses. The horse which was so badly burned was shot last night to put it out of misery, the animal evidently having inhaled some of the flame. It has been reported that box 63 did not ring when pulled, but this is incorrect; it rang four rounds all right, after which someone pulled box 66, at Longwill's blacksmith shop on the same street.

SAVINGS BANK'S GOOD YEAR.

Largest Gain in Deposits in the History of the Institution.

The annual meeting of the incorporators of the Palmer Savings Bank was held Monday afternoon, and the report of the treasurer was of a most gratifying nature. It showed that while the banks in many localities have not held their own in the matter of deposits, the Palmer bank has made the greatest gain of any year in its history, having increased its deposits $75,808; there is now due depositors $1,073,813. There has been a net gain of 131 accounts during the year, the total number now being 3023, with an average of $355 each. Besides paying a dividend of 4½ per cent, taxes and running expenses, between $3000 and $4000 has been added to the undivided profits. The bank is in a very prosperous condition, the par value of its securities amounting to $104.84 for each dollar of deposits, while the market value is $107.59, a standing equalled by few.

The Business Club's Reception.

The social event of the season thus far was the reception given Tuesday evening by the Palmer Business and Social Club in its rooms in Holden's block, in celebration of the first anniversary of its organization. A large number of tickets had been issued, and about 200 gathered in the rooms, many coming from the other villages of the town and from Monson. The rooms were handsomely decorated by Royce of Palmer, the curtains and draperies having bands of running pine with pinks entertwined, the electric fixtures and the pictures on the walls being trimmed in a similar manner. The guests commenced to arrive about 8 o'clock, and were welcomed by the committee of arrangements, C. B. Fiske, Rufus Flynt, H. C. Strong, G. S. Holden, Dr. E. Bryant and J. F. Foley. After an hour of sociability the company was called to order by the president of the club, C. E. Fish, who introduced as toastmaster Lawyer H. C. Strong. A historical address was given by the retiring secretary, Mr. H. W. McGregory, after which the following toasts were responded to: "The Town of Palmer," W. W. Leach; "Our Neighbors," W. H. Gifford of Monson; "The Ladies," C. B. Fiske; "Our Merchants," D. L. Bodfish; "Our Manufacturers," C. F. Grosvenor; "The Commonwealth," Rev. H. F. Moulton; "The Palmer Business and Social Club," C. E. Fish. After the speeches a delightful lunch was served by Barr of Springfield. The Springfield Orchestral Club furnished music throughout the evening, and after lunch dancing was in order in the assembly room until about midnight. The whole affair was a most enjoyable one, and one which will long be remembered by those who were present.

Congregational Parish Meeting.

The annual meeting of the Congregational parish was held Monday evening with J. B. Shaw as moderator. The treasurer's report showed the receipts of the past year to have been $2240, and the payments $2161. The prudential committee reported having drawn orders for $2694, of which $598 is still unpaid; there is due the parish and collectable, about $148, leaving the net indebtedness about $450. A communication was read from the ladies' society of the church, pledging $100 if the parish would wipe out its indebtedness. It was voted, 18 to 13, to continue the parish, there seeming to be considerable feeling on the part of some of the older members that it should be continued for the sake of old associations. The following appropriations were made: Pastor's salary, $1500; pulpit supply, $40; janitor, $200; fuel and lights, $200; music, $250; incidentals, $100; total, $2360. These officers were elected: Clerk, O. P. Allen; prudential committee, Dr. G. H. Wilkins, L. E. Chandler, G. A. Rice; collector and treasurer, W. R. Milligan; auditor, H. P. Holden.

Child Scalded to Death.

Grace, the eighteen months old daughter of Fred and Mary Darling, fell into a tub of hot water Wednesday afternoon and was so badly burned that she died in about 12 hours. Mr. and Mrs. Darling live in the house opposite the iron foundry, and the mother was away at work, the child being at the home of its grandmother, Mrs. George Lee, on Foundry street. It was left asleep in the room, with a small tub of hot water on the floor, no danger being thought of because the child was sleeping; Mrs. Lee left the room for a moment, and while she was gone the little one wakened, and the grandmother returned just as the child upset the tub of water. It evidently fell on the edge of the tub and tipped it over toward itself, as its neck, arms and chest were badly scalded; it was conscious for only abut half an hour.

The Hat Shop Shuts Down.

The whistle at the hat shop of the Rogers-Osgood Co. blew for 12 yesterday noon, but did not blow at one, and it is not known when the works will start up again. The cause of the shut-down is the financial embarrassment of the company. There has not been as much business this season as was expected, and the company has not been able to keep above water. It is expected that an offer of compromise will be made to the creditors soon, and that if this is accepted that the works will start up again in a few days, having been promised, if they are able to do this, work enough to keep the factory humming the rest of the season. If the offer of compromise is not accepted, the company will probably go into insolvency.

Mr. and Mrs. L. E. Moore of Newtonville have been having an unusually trying experience with sickness in their family. One child was taken with a severe cold on Christmas day, another fell a victim the day after, and a third, Louise, was taken with a croupy turn on Saturday which progressed so rapidly that tracheotomy was performed Sunday. Others of the family were taken sick, and three trained nurses and a specialist from Boston were required. Under date of the 14th Mr. Moore writes that at times since then nine members of the family have been sick with more or less hard colds, sore throats, membranous croup and diphtheria, in all grades from the two extremes, and that most of the time at least four have been sick in bed. All are reported better now, however, news which the many friends of Mr. and Mrs. Moore in this vicinity will be glad to hear, while much sympathy will go out to them in their time of trouble and anxiety.

The birthday social at St. Paul's church last evening was a social and literary success, and netted the Ladies' Social Union about $40. A fine supper was served, and the tables were nearly all filled the second time. After supper the lecture room and ladies parlor were filled by an audience of 150. The entertainment consisted of a piano solo by Miss Bertha Royce, readings by Miss Ola Northrop, and a vocal solo by Miss Georgia Packard, all of which were rendered in a pleasing and skillful manner. The lecture by Miss Linda Brigham, on "A Year in Saxony," was the chief feature of the evening. For an hour she held the audience with rarely a movement on their part, as she told of her year's stay in that country with eloquence, humor and pathos. This was Miss Brigham's first appearance in this village as a lecturer, although she has been for some time a resident. Doubtless another engagement of her lecture services will soon be made, as many have expressed a desire to listen to another of her productions based on her foreign travels.

Judge Robinson of the district court has two souvenirs of the late Judge Shurtleff of Springfield, which he prizes very highly. It was a habit of Judge Shurtleff, when a person appeared before him with a long story, to fall to sketching on anything which might happen to lie on the desk before him, and on the large desk blotter on the district court desk appears the date Sept. 11, 1895, with a scroll beneath it and the initials W. S. S. under that. Just below is the date Nov. 26, 1895, these being the dates on which Judge Shurtleff held probate court in Palmer. At the right of the blotter is a sketch of a man's head, which Judge Robinson said was made while a particularly "fishy" story was being told Judge Shurtleff on Nov. 27th by some petitioner. He fell to sketching while the man told his tale, waiting for him to finish, but catching every word meanwhile. The desk in Judge Robinson's private office is one which was sent there from the Springfield court house when the local court was established, and on the edge of one of the drawers is cut with a knife, "W. S. S.,—J., Feb. 6, '53."

The extent of his injuries is not known at the time of going to press.

A Series of Accidents.

Three accidents have occurred within a week to employes of the Boston Duck Co. E. E. Ryther, foreman of the yard, fell about eight feet from a ladder in one of the storehouses Friday afternoon, striking on his face and bruising it badly. He was taken home unconscious, and it was about three hours before he recovered enough to know what had happened. No bones were broken, but he wears an ugly bruise on his nose, a gash under his chin, and a black eye.

Saturday morning Alex Buskuski, employed in the card room, caught the forefinger of his left hand in the machinery, and the bone was so badly broken that the finger had to be amputated at the second joint.

The third victim was John Greene, second-hand in the weave room. A shuttle slipping out of place in one of the looms struck him in the ear, cutting quite a deep gash. The shuttle was about 18 inches long with a steel point, and is driven back and forth with immense force. Had this struck him a little higher it might have resulted seriously.

Charles Orcutt accidentally slipped into the pond Saturday, through an opening where they had been cutting ice. The temperature of the water no doubt was a little too near freezing point for comfortable foot bath, for his exertions to save himself were quite agile compared to those on terra firma.

Owing to the large crowd on the pond Wednesday evening, those who were skating were somewhat impeded in their progress by the thoughtlessness of non-skaters standing in the way, yet a very enjoyable time is reported nevertheless, and the trial carnival proved sufficiently satisfactory to warrant a better one to-morrow. The orchestra played admirably.

It is said that there is some dissatisfaction among parents in regard to the methods used by one of the primary school teachers in punishing her scholars. One woman took it upon herself last week to "straighten out" the said teacher, and the interview was rather spicy, judging from reports. It is thought by some, however, that the woman in question had good reasons for displeasure.

Weather and ice permitting, there will be a skating carnival on the pond to-morrow afternoon and evening. The orchestra will furnish music, and in the evening the ice will be illuminated with Japanese lanterns. All in the surrounding villages who are fond of the sport are cordially invited to attend. Congregational Parish Meeting.

The parish meeting for the election of officers was held Tuesday evening in the Congregational church. After the reading of the warrant by Charles C. Keep, Dr. George E. Fuller offered prayer, and Edward F. Morris was chosen moderator. The treasurer's report was read and accepted. There is likely to be an arrearage at the close of the year (in April) due to special expenditures during the past summer, but the report showed a good standing for the time of the year. The present officers were reëlected, as follows: Clerk, Charles C. Keep; treasurer, Frank E. Morris; auditor, Perlin W. Soule; prudential committee, Dr. George E. Fuller, Harrison Howe, Fred D. Rogers; music committee, Lyman C. Flynt, Wilson M. Tucker, Dr. Wheeler Rand. The sum of $1600 was appropriated for the pastor's salary and $800 for music; the appropriation for contingent expenses was left with the prudential committee, and the parish debt was also referred to this committee. It was voted to continue the pledge system, as it has proven to be more successful than the former method, although some of the small contributions of last year have dropped out the current year. It is thought that some do not fully realize the importance of giving, even small sums, and with this in view the prudential committee was given authority to appoint a collector. The meeting adjourned to the second Tuesday in April at 7.30 p. m.

Through a mistake of the printer the sketch of the Congregational church last week contained these inaccuracies: "Thomas Cotton" should be "Theron Colton," and it should have stated that Rev. "C. B. Sumner was succeeded by Rev. E. H. Byington, in 1880." Mr. Byington by Mr. Hatch.

Addie Williamson, wife of Horace Bumstead, died at her home on the Stafford road last Saturday of kidney trouble after a long sickness. He regarded this as a hopeful sign, as during the year several persons had died and several had left town.

Although he found tracks he was obliged to give up the search at night, and went to the Century Hotel. During the evening a scratching was heard at the door, and someone exclaimed: "There are your dogs!" Sure enough, when the door was opened, in they trotted. They were all right, but, oh! so tired. Their master gave them his coat to sleep on, and in the morning started for home.

There is a strong feeling that the New England Telephone and Telegraph Co. does not expect to make use of its franchise, although a representative of the company is said to have promised that the work of setting poles should begin as soon as a right of way was granted. The opinion is that the company's backwardness is due to the opposition in both Palmer and Monson to having Monson cut off from the Palmer exchange, as the understanding with the Palmer subscribers when their instruments were put in was that communication with Monson should always be free, and at last accounts the company proposed to charge toll.

A. A. Gage camp, Sons of Veterans, installed these officers Tuesday evening, with Dr. Leslie Hendee, captain of C. W. Cross camp of Palmer, as installing officer: Captain, Morton L. BRIMFIELD.

There was a remarkable record of attendance at the Hitchcock Free High School during the severe weather of last week. A large number of pupils live at a distance and ride many miles daily in going to and from the school. A barge carries about a dozen pupils from Sturbridge and Fiskdale, and is driven by a member of the senior class whose home is in Southbridge and who drives 20 miles each day. Others from Wales and the various outlying districts of Brimfield from three to five miles distant are in daily attendance at the school. Monday morning pupils ride from Union, Ct., and from other distant homes to remain during the week. With the mercury ranging from 16 to 25 degrees below zero last week only one pupil was absent Monday morning, and all present were promptly in attendance at 8.45, the hour of opening the school. Some of these arrived in a pretty frosty condition, but there was no difficulty in heating the building, and no ill effects from exposure are reported.

WARE.

Death of John Kennedy.

John Kennedy, 47, died at his home on North street last Friday evening, after a long illness, borne with great fortitude and even cheerfulness. Mr. Kennedy was a native of Maybole, Ayeshire, Scotland, and received his education in the public schools of that town, finishing with a course in Edinburgh University. He came to Ware about 28 years ago, and for nearly all that period has been in the service of the Otis Company, for over 20 years overseer in the underwear department. The funeral was held on Monday morning at 10.30 from All Saints' church. At the requiem high mass the rector, Rev. James Boyle, was celebrant, Rev. John T. Sheehan was deacon, Rev. Mr. Meehan sub-deacon, and Rev. J. T. Leary master of ceremonies. The music was impressive. Prof. Coenan of Springfield presided at the organ, and was assisted by the Springfield Orchestral Club and a quartet consisting of Miss Anna Murray, soprano, Miss O'Grady, alto, Mr. John Lynch, tenor, and Mr. P. J. Mulvany, bass. Before reciting the final prayers of the service, the rector of the church made a few remarks, of which the following is the substance:

The angel of death has knocked at many a door in our town during the past few weeks, taking the man full of years and honors, taking the young girl just blooming into womanhood, taking the young man in the first years of an active business life, taking the child who hardly knew what life is, and now the man in his prime and filled with hopes of many years of life and noble work to do; thus showing that he is no respecter of persons. At whatever time, to whatever household death comes, it brings grief. And yet, we may often find consolation by recalling to mind the strength and beauty of the character developed by the life of the departed. We are gathered here to-day in sorrow and mourning to pay our tribute of respect to the memory of one who was—what the poet describes as the noblest work of God—an honest man. Among the virtues which beautified the life of John Kennedy there stood out conspicuously these two: Sincerity and honesty. Of a sensitive nature and with a mind filled with high ideals of life's duties, he could not understand how anyone could be otherwise than direct and fair in his social relations. Truth and justice were to him the essence of life. Fully imbued with that deep religious feeling which is the characteristic of his country's people, and which was born with him as an inheritance from his ancestors, he could not be otherwise than honest and sincere in his relations with the world; he could not be otherwise than faithful to his church and generously true to God. To any work that commanded his attention he gave himself, heart and soul, with all the energy and devotion of a strong and unselfish nature. And we of All Saints' parish have seen this fact exemplified in the interest he took in the formation and maintenance of our church choir and the unremitting care he gave to the music of the church's services during many years past. By his death our congregation loses a noble and devoted member, and our town a worthy and useful citizen. To the bereaved family, to the relatives and friends of Mr. Kennedy, I would recall the words of St. Paul and I would say, "Grieve not as those who have no hope." For your loved one is not parted from you forever. He has merely passed through the gate of death a little sooner than you, to enter into the higher life for which we were all created, and you will meet again when your career on earth is over. Death does not separate you. His spirit still lives and you may commune with him through the medium of your prayers to God. When death came to one of their number, the early Christians were accustomed to strew flowers over his grave and sing canticles of joy because another Christian warrior had entered upon his reward. So to-day, with music and with prayer, we give our dead back to God. We bring his body here before the altar of God to offer over it the highest form of prayer known to religion—the sacrifice of the mass, the renewal of that offering which Christ made upon the cross for the salvation of the world—asking that if any stain of sin may yet remain upon the soul of the departed, that stain may be washed away through the merits of the sufferings and sacrifice of Christ our Lord. We treat with respect and reverence the body that lies before us, not because of what it is now, but because of what it was in life and because of what it will be on the last day. In life this body was a temple of the Holy Ghost, a casket that held an immortal soul. The soul has gone to receive the reward of an honorable and well-spent life; the body we give back to mother earth. But at the sound of the trumpet this corruptible body will put on incorruptibility, this mortal will put on immortality and be united once again, and for all eternity, with the soul that dwelt with it and with which it shared the sufferings and trials of an earthly career.

The attendance at the services was very large. The bearers were William F. Wilson, Thomas P. Studd, Frank H. Gates, T. J. McBride, James E. Clark and Henry H. Warner, all of whom were closely associated with Mr. Kennedy in the business of the Otis Company. The floral tributes were many and beautiful, including a large wreath from the Otis Co's. overseers and counting room; cross and crown from the employes in the packing room; closed book from All Saints' choir; standing cross from the Ware water commissioners; pillow from his wife; palms from Mary Fitzpatrick; basket from Miss Rohan and Mrs. Healey; Roman hyacinths, Mrs. Sharpe and Mrs. Bennett; white roses from Baby Clark; evergreen wreath and cross, no names. Mr. Kennedy is survived by a widow and four children, Miss Catherine Kennedy, music teacher in the public schools and organist in All Saints' church, John G. Kennedy of Boston, and Henry and Paul at home.

LEGISLATIVE MATTERS.

BOSTON, Jan. 15, 1896.

The chief political event of the session, next to the amendment for biennial elections, is the division of the state into senatorial and councillor districts. According to the census of 1895 there are 560,802 voters in the state. They are divided by counties as follows: Barnstable, 7620; Berkshire, 20,186; Bristol, 42,495; Dukes, 1236; Essex, 77,282; Franklin, 10,332; Hampden, 31,568; Hampshire, 11,888; Middlesex, 109,577; Nantucket, 886; Norfolk, 31,565; Plymouth, 26,956; Suffolk, 123,102; Worcester, 66,109. There has been prepared for the use of the Legislature a document giving the number of voters in the several councillor, senatorial and representative districts as they were established by the divisions of 1886 and as they stand to-day. Striking changes have occurred. While nearly every district in the state has gained somewhat in population, yet a few have lost absolutely, as well as relatively, while there have been great differences in the rate of growth. The consequence is that the Legislature will be utterly unable to follow the present lines in the case of any system of districts, whatever may be true of individual cases. The entire system will have to be recast thoroughly.

A cursory inspection of the tables of voters reveals the fact that the towns will suffer seriously compared with the cities. The greatest changes in population are in the vicinity of Boston, where the first Middlesex senatorial district has gained from 10,711 voters in 1886 to 18,085 in 1895. But the Cape senatorial district has actually lost from 10,345 in 1885 to 9742 in 1895. The political power of the towns is therefore waning, while the cities and large towns are gaining. It would not do to remedy this by giving the benefit of the doubt in any case of surplus population to the town, for the tendency of the times is toward the cities, and any inequality to favor the towns would increase rapidly during the coming ten years. To be exactly just, the committee ought to study the movement of population and to try to make the districts as uniform as possible for the most of the coming term of the next ten years when there can be no change. This division will have an effect upon town politics. It will reduce the chances of the small towns for representation in the Legislature, and very likely will prevent some of them from having a representative more than once in the ten years, instead of twice as they now have. This will be so even under the annual elections. With the biennial system established a town might not be able to secure a representative more than once in twenty years. It is certain that some of the small towns would not have more than this proportion. It would not be strange if this factor would be of material consequence in the coming contest, for the small towns will naturally oppose their obliteration as stoutly as possible.

The vote for the 10th Hampden representative district is as follows for 1885 and 1895:

	1885	1895
Ludlow,	305	372
Palmer,	1069	1196
Brimfield,	295	260
Holland,	72	54
	1741	1882

The smallest towns have lost not only relatively, but absolutely, and these two are fairly representative of many which will suffer all over the state. The first Hampden senatorial district had 11,534 voters in 1885, and 15,137 in 1895, but more gain was made in Springfield than in the district as a whole, for it rose from 1886 in 1885 to 12,240 in 1895.

The annual report of the state board of education is an exceedingly interesting document, and some of the points which it brings out are worthy of the attention of the state. Toward the end of the report Secretary Hill quotes from Prof. W. T. Harris of Massachusetts, formerly superintendent of schools in St. Louis, in high praise of the Massachusetts school system. Prof. Harris says that the total amount of school education that each inhabitant of Massachusetts is receiving on an average is nearly seven years of 200 days each, while the average given each citizen in the whole nation is only four and three-tenths of such years. No other state is giving so much education to its people as Massachusetts, and yet all the education given in all its institutions does not amount on an average to so much as seven-eighths of an elementary education of eight years. Even Massachusetts is not overeducating the people. But there would seem to be some connection between the fact that, while her citizens get nearly twice the national average amount of education, her wealth-producing power as compared with other states stands almost in the same ratio, namely (in 1885), at 73 cents per day for each man, woman and child, while the average for the whole nation was only 40 cents.

Commenting on these figures, Secretary Hill says: "Consider for a moment what is implied in this ratio of 73 to 40. It means for every man, woman and child in the state an average wealth-producing power of 33 cents a day in excess of the average of the nation at large, or more than $100 a year. It means that the 2,500,000 people in Massachusetts produce $250,000,000 a year more than they would produce if they were only average earners. This is 25 times the annual expenditure for schools."

The number of persons in the state of school age, from 5 to 15 years, is 408,898, an increase for the year of 8573. The number of persons of all ages in the public schools was 412,593, an increase of 11,884. The average membership in all the public schools was 341,671, an increase of 13,316. The average attendance for the year was 313,693, an increase of 14,624. The percentage of attendance, based upon average membership, was 92. There were 1046 men teachers and 10,981 women, an increase of 37 men and 276 women. The number of teachers who have attended normal schools was 4368, an increase of 146. The average wages of the men teachers were $128.55 per month, a decrease of 86 cents, while the average for women was $48.38, a gain of 47 cents. There are 252 high schools in the state, a decrease of three. But there was an increase of 54 in high school teachers and of 2212 in high school pupils. There were 54 cities and towns sustaining evening schools, having 749 such schools, with 1166 teachers and 29,298 pupils,—28,277 males and 6991 females.

The amount raised for taxation and spent for public schools, including only wages and board of teachers, fuel and janitors' services, was $6,949,943, an increase for the year of $297,637. There are 59 incorporated academies, having 5484 pupils who paid $406,486 for tuition. There were 59,204 pupils in private schools during the year, of course being largely in the parochial schools. The following significant words are given regarding the parochial schools: "When it is seen that private schools, chiefly parochial, reduced the cost per pupil as based on the number of children between 5 and 15 from the state average of $19.89 to half, that sum, and even less in many places, a glimpse is obtained of the heavy pecuniary burden such schools must impose upon the people who maintain them, and who, in addition thereto, help also to maintain the public schools. The sentiment of the commonwealth, as expressed in its constitution, gives no hope of relief, through the division of the school money, from this self-assumed burden. The sacrifice that prompts people to bear it is impressive. Their right to bear it no one questions. The wisdom of private schools under certain exceptional conditions is admitted. Nevertheless, it remains a regretable fact that people of all political and religious views and of all stations in life cannot more generally stand on a common public school platform, unitedly pledged to do their utmost, in the interest of their noblest citizenship, for the physical, mental and moral welfare of all their children."

The question of the state house front is reopened from the very foundation by a bill which has been presented to the House for a public competition for plans for the solution of the problem of the state house front. This solution may take either the form of a reconstruction of the present front, or it may involve a complete demolition of the old building and a reconstruction from the foundation. It seems to be settled that the old building will not ever be used again in its present condition. If its walls are permitted to stand, the interior must be thoroughly remodeled and the external be changed to correspond with the extension. It looks now as if the saving which has been done for the last two years was only temporary. The construction of the new part next to the Bulfinch front is progressing rapidly now that the roof is on and the workmen are thoroughly protected from the weather.

Salt Water Bathing at home or shore, for health and cleanliness, can be done perfectly with Pearline. The Pearline in such a bath gives you luxurious cleanliness. More, too. It's a decided help toward making the salt water do you good. You don't get all out of it that you can, unless you assist it with Pearline. Soap is out of the question in salt water bathing. You can't use soap with salt water, any way.

Beware Peddlers and some unscrupulous grocers will tell you, "this is as good as" or "the same as Pearline." IT'S FALSE—Pearline is never peddled, and if your grocer sends you something in place of Pearline, do the honest thing—send it back. 401 JAMES PYLE, New York.

The Clown's Baby.

It was out on the Western frontier,
The miners, rugged and brown,
Were gathered around the posters—
The circus had come to town!
The great tent shone in the darkness,
Like a wonderful palace of light,
And rough men crowded the entrance—
Shows didn't come every night!

Not a woman's face among them;
Many a face that was bad,
And some that were only vacant,
And some that were only sad.
And behind a canvas curtain,
In a corner of the place,
The clown, with chalk and vermilion,
Was making up his face.

A weary-looking woman,
With a smile that still was sweet,
Sewed on a little garment,
With a cradle at her feet.

Pantaloon stood ready and watting;
It was time for the going on;
But the clown in vain searched wildly,
The "property baby" was gone.

He murmured, impatiently hunting,
"It's strange that I cannot find;
There! I've looked in every corner;
It must have been left behind!"
The miner's were stamping and shouting,
They were not very patient men;
The clown bent over the cradle:
"I must take you, little Ren!"

The mother started and shivered,
But trouble and want were near:
She lifted her baby gently;
"You'll be very careful, dear?"
"Careful! You foolish darling!"
How tenderly it was said;
While a smile shone through the chalk and paint:
"I love each hair of his head?"

The noise rose into an uproar,
Misrule for the time was king;
The clown, with a foolish chuckle,
Bolted into the ring.
But as, with a squeak and a flourish,
The fiddles closed their tune,
"You'll hold him as he was made of glass!"
Said the clown to Pantaloon.

The jovial fellow nodded:
"I've a couple myself," he said,
"I know how to handle 'em, bless you!
Old fellow, go ahead!"
The fun grow fast and furious,
And not one of all the crowd
Had guessed that the baby was alive,
When he suddenly laughed aloud.

Oh, that baby laugh! it was echoed
From the benches with a ring,
And the roughest customer there sprang up
With, "Boys, it's the real thing!"
The ring was jammed in a minute,
Not a man that did not strive
For "a shot at holding the baby,
The baby that was alive!"

He was thronged by kneeling suitors
In the midst of the dusty ring,
And he held his court right royally,
The fair little baby king.
Till one of the shouting courtiers,
A man with a bold, hard face,
The talk for miles of the country,
And the terror of the place,

Raised the little king to his shoulder,
And chuckled: "Look at that!"
As the chubby fingers clutched his hair,
Then, "Boys, hand round the hat!"
There never was such a hatful
Of silver, and gold, and notes;
People are not always penniless
Because they don't wear coats.

And then, "Three cheers for the baby!"
I tell you those cheers were meant,
And the way in which they were given
Was enough to raise the tent.
And then there was sudden silence,
And a gruff old miner said:
"Come, boys, enough of this rumpus!
It's time it was put to bed."

So, looking a little sheepish,
But with faces strangely bright,
The audience, somewhat lingering,
Flocked out into the night.
And the bold-faced leader chuckled:
"He wasn't a bit afraid!
He's as game as he's good looking.
Boys, that was a show that paid!"

AN ALABAMA SANTA CLAUS.

"Yais, chile; nex' week's Chris'mus an' ole Santy Claus'll be round de same as usual, I do expec'," remarked Deacon Ketchum, as he sat in front of his cabin in the early evening, meditatively puffing at his pipe, fighting mosquitoes with his left hand and scratching his prize hound with his right.

"Did you eber see him, daddy?" inquired his eight-years-old son with glistening eyes.

"See him, chile? I's seen him hundreds of times, an' allus on Chris'mas ebe. He's a fat man," answered the deacon very solemnly.

"Am he white, daddy?" queried the youth.

"Lor' bress yo'! no, chile. He bracker dan yo'r mudder, an' he drive a big cotton truck wif six army muels, and each muel hab a tambourine tied to he tail and a harmonica in he mouf, an' on each meul am a brack cherubim a-playin' on a banjo an' a jews-harp; so you see dat leabes ole Santy free to jes' climb down the chimberlies an' distribute." And the ole man nodded his head sagely and glanced upward.

"Whad yo' spec' he'll leabe us, daddy?" whispered his son, with a palpitating heart.

"Wa-al," answered the deacon, "dat depen's considable on the market, chile. I'se rather s'picion, dough, dat he'll leabe yo'r daddy about a quart ob gin an' a pound ob baccy, ez usual; an' yo'r mudder a new wash-board an' a dozen bars of soap; an' ef yo're good an' 'bedient he'll likely leabe you a new fish line; an' ef he do yo' kin swap wif yo'r daddy fo' mah ole line wif the knots in it."

And the deacon slowly knocked the ashes from his pipe and threw a pine cone at the screech owl in the live oak tree.—Judge.

POULTRY BILL OF FARE.—I feed my hens in the morning a mush consisting of 10 parts by measure of coarse bran, one part corn meal, two parts animal meal. In summer this is mixed with cold water the night before to give it a chance to swell, in winter with hot water, and let stand one-half to one hour, says a correspondent of the Rural New Yorker. In the afternoon, from three to five o'clock, according to the season, one-third cracked corn, two-third oats are thrown on the floor to be scratched for. The cracked corn has the meal taken out by the miller, so that there is no waste. I would feed wheat, but it costs too much now, ($1.60 per 100 lbs. for damaged). In the winter when I wish fresh eggs I feed them cabbage every day. If I had nothing else to do but look after my hens I might apprentice myself to a French cook, then I could get them up a good dinner once in a while.

Minnie—"I wonder if I will get my stocking full this Christmas?" Mamie—"It's rather late to begin, but you might try bicycle riding."—Indianapolis Journal.

Why

Do people buy Hood's Sarsaparilla in preference to any other,—in fact almost to the exclusion of all others?

Because

They know from actual use that Hood's is the best, i. e., it cures when others fail. Hood's Sarsaparilla is still made under the personal supervision of the educated pharmacists who originated it.

The question of best is just as positively decided in favor of Hood's as the question of comparative sales.

Another thing: Every advertisement of Hood's Sarsaparilla is true, is honest.

MUSHRAT FRENCH NEAR DETROIT.

Out in the region of the St. Clair flats, near Detroit, lives a peculiar tribe known in general as the mushrat French. Nowhere else in the United States is there a community such as this in language and customs. Despite the fact that their ancestors have lived there for a century and a half, they speak English that is barely intelligible to the average citizen, while their French, it is said, is totally beyond the ken of the Parisian. In one respect they are particularly notable—that is in their ability as story-tellers. The Detroiters understand them, and the mushrat French know it, so that as raconteurs they are not at their best before them, but let them get hold of a guileless Easterner and they will fill him full of the most marvelous tales of hunting and fishing adventures that ever come from the mouth of a man.

As a means of earning money they hunt and fish, selling their prey to the markets. Their own staple food article is the muskrat, called "mushrat," which abound out there; hence their name mushrat French. Against all ridicule they will maintain that no beast, bird or fish is more delicate, sustaining and healthful than this animal.

"Take eem fat," said one of them to a New Yorker, who spent part of his vacation on the flats, "take eem fat, stoff eem up with airbs (herbs) an' speece (spice), put eem on the fire an' roast eem, an' sh! what will you? He is pairfect. You shall not tell eem from duck. Gintlemin of New York come 'ere to eat duck. We give eem mushrat cook comme il faut. He say: 'Ah, heaven! Ah, God! Nevaire, nevaire have I eat such a duck! He thought it for a duck, that mushrat."

This same New Yorker made cuff notes of some of the hunting and fishing stories which he heard during his stay in the region of the flats, and preserved some of the more notable of them to turn over to a Sun reporter. At first he essayed to set down data in a note-book, but the mushrat French viewed this process with such open distrust that he quickly gave over, doing his subsequent note taking surreptitiously.

"Las' week," said Henri, "up on a Roosh (the Rouge river). Look for deer. See a buck 'cross rivaire. Raise gun. Bang? Something jump from water. Ping! Bullet go through eem. He is beeg mosk'longe. Bullet go on. Pang! Kill buck. Go through buck. Pud! Hit big tree. Henri leave gun, jump in water, get mosk'longe, sweem ovaire to buck. Mosk'longe dead, t'irty poun.' Buck dead, t'ree hundraid poun'. Hole in tree where bullet hit. Honey run out. Grab hare, knock eem against log an' kill t'ree partridge."

At this point Henri's voice rises to a perfect yell, and he almost chokes in his frenzy. The others nod and grunt their approbation.

"How you get zem all back?" asks Antonin.

"Put hare in pocket," says Henri, subsiding into a modified howl, "put partridge in othaire pocket, an' sweem 'cross again."

"Pretty good, Hennery," say "Beel," who is not of the mushrat French himself.

"Pretty good; how 'bout you, Antoine?"

"Go feesh las' week," says Antoine in a voice that would draw tears from a rock.

"Feesh in Lake Erie. Good luck. Catch pairch: 50—40 pairch. Oh, beeg! Poun', two poun'. Good luck. Get ready go home. 'Take oar. Then, splash! Mosk'longe, 50 poun', leap into boat, I laugh. Say Antoine, great luck! Fifty—40 beeg pairch, beeg mosk'longe. Great luck. I row. But no! Flip, go mosk'longe tail. Out go pairch. Flip! 'Nothaire pairch, Flip—flip—flip—flip! All pairch gonej Flip splash, out go mosk'longe. All gone! Mon Dieu. I scream, I weep. All gone—pairch, mosk'longe, all! I return with ze broken heart."

"True," says Toydo, "I see you when you are come back with not one feesh,"

Not an iota of doubt is exposed even by the lifting of an evebrow. To doubt a mushrat Frenchman's word is not safe.—New York Sun.

CURIOSITIES OF THE CALENDAR.

When the bells ring in the year 1897 their clamors will tell the inabilities of women to proposes for seven years. In other words, the year 1900 will not be a leap year. There will be seven years without any grant of special privilege to the fair sex. It is a curious prank these same calendar makers have played, on the women directly, and on the men indirectly.

The introduction of an additional day into the calendar once in four years is necessary to prevent the average year from being too short. At the same time it makes the average year a little too long. This additional year is so slight that it accumulates very slowly. Nevertheless, it does accumulate, and by the end of a century it amounts to nearly a day. For that reason once in a hundred years the additional day which marks the year as leap year is omitted, and the average length of the year is reduced.

The English law determined in 1751 on reforms in the calendar, and from those we draw the use. The original determination of the calendar was made by the pope, and afterward it was adopted by all the countries except Russia and the East. From January 12, 1752, the civil year was made to begin on that date, and not on March 1, as many had it. In the same year 11 days were dropped from the calendar, from the 3d to the 13th, inclusive, so that what would have been the 14th became the 3d.

With this change effected the remainder of the calendar followed its usual course. By this change the day which would have been December 25 became January 5. It was from this that the latter derived its name of Old Christmas day.

The further regulation of the calendar occurred in omitting the year 1800 from the number of leap years. Therefore in 1801 Old Christmas day fell on January 6, and from that time until this that is the day of the month called by that name.

In Rider's "British Merlin" for 1801 we find it stated that 1900 is not to be a leap year, while 1901 is to be the fifth year after bissextile, or leap year, and the first year of the 20th century. For this century the first leap year was 1804, which is described as such in the almanacs which were then current.

An old almanac for 1800, Moore's, names the year as the fourth after bissextile, or leap year, and then states that in spite of its being the fourth year from leap year 1796, the month of February had only 28 days. Following this fashion 1802 is called the sixth year after bissextile, and 1803 the seventh.

Curious as all this appears to us it is precisely what we will soon do. Throughout seven years there will be no February 29 after 1896. All of the births and other events which occurred on that unfortunate day of the month will have no opportunity to celebrate that anniversary. That eccentric date, February 29, will then have an opportunity for renown brought on by its absence.

The calendar adjustment by which these matters were arranged reaches forward to a distance that is startling to one whose term of life is the 70 years of man. It declared that the years 1800, 1900, 2100, 2200, or any other hundreth year in time to come shall consist of 365 days and no more. But the fact also remains that this adjustment of the calendar was not quite accurate. The one day omitted once in the century made the average year a very little too short. To remedy this effect the adjusters made the following exception to the rule, making the hundreth years of 365 days, except every fourth hundreth year beginning with the year 2000. These years will be leap years, that is the years 2000, 2400, 2800, 3200 will have a February 29. But their days are not of great concern to us.—New York Herald.

A LOW TRICK ON THE PEDOMETER.

A good story is told in Pearson's Weekly of the way in which a clever lieutenant outwitted a British admiral. The British ship was lying in the harbor at Havana in July, and the temperature of the Cuban port at that season was not conducive to activity—on the part of the junior watch officers, at any rate. In fact, a comfortable arm-chair seemed exactly to fit the exigencies of the watch, after the captain and the admiral had turned in. One morning the mail brought a small square box to the admiral, and that evening he gave a small round instrument, resembling a time-piece, to the junior watch officer, saying:

"Mr. Marline, carry this with you on your watch, and pass it along to your relief with similar instructions."

Marline put the machine in his pocket and commenced to stroll to and fro until the admiral retired. Then he stretched himself out in his chair, and lighting a cigarette, began to watch the lights go out one by one on shore.

Next morning Lieuts. Marline, Mainhold and Lazarette stood before the admiral.

"Gentlemen," said the officer sternly, "I have examined this little instrument, which you tell me was carried by you three gentlemen in succession on your respective watches, and I am astonished to find that although I set it at zero last evening it now records only 2½ miles. Gentlemen, I do not mean to condemn you on the unsupported testimony of a pedometer, and I must confess that, knowing you to be ambitious and diligent officers, I am loath to trust an apparent record so far below the actual requirements. However, I shall ask you to carry the instrument again to-morrow evening. Gentlemen, you are excused."

Lieut Mainhold had the first watch that evening, and as soon as the admiral had gone to his cabin he seated himself in the armchair and ordered Midshipman Ratline to appear before him.

"Ratline," said the lieutenant, "when you went ashore to-day you absented yourself without permission for half an hour."

"Aye, aye, sir."

"You doubtless imagined that I intended to overlook your offense."

"I had hoped so, sir."

"Not at all. You must take this instrument and shake it violently for four hours and I shall say no more about it."

The morning after the three same officers stood again before the admiral.

"Gentlemen," said he, "I fear I have misjudged you. I find on examining the pedometer this morning that it records a distance of 89 miles walked by you three gentlemen in 12 hours. It is evident that the machine is utterly worthless," and a sharp splash was heard as the pedometer struck the limpid water of the bay. "Gentlemen, you are excused."

Be Glad.

O heart of mine, we shouldn't
Worry so!
What we've missed of calm we couldn't
Have you know!
What we have met of stormy pain,
And of sorrow's driving rain,
We can never meet again
If it blow.

We have erred in that dark hour
We have known.
When the tears fell with the shower
All alone—
Were not shine and shower blent
As the gracious Master meant?
Let us temper our content
With His own.

For we know not every sorrow
Can be sad;
So, forgetting all the sorrow
We have had,
Let us fold away our fears
And put by our foolish tears,
And through all the coming years
Just be glad.

THE NERVIEST MAN IN THE WORLD.

J. K. Chambers, union depot ticket agent, when in a reminiscent mood, can tell many interesting stories of the West in early days. He was in the service of the government at Sidney when that town was the toughest place in Nebraska, if not in the West, and from whence persons bound for the Black Hills started. A few days ago Mr. Chambers was sitting in the Milwaukee city office, and the conversation turned to early days in the trans-Missouri country and bravery.

"The man of iron nerve I saw in Sidney in '77," said Mr. Chambers, "was a beardless man, scarcely more than a boy, and I should judge had not reached his majority. He was a tough man even in Sidney, and his reputation was sustained, for he always carried a revolver, and he would shoot at the drop of the hat. His name was Doug Reed. It was said around town that he would never die a natural death. That turned out true, as he was lynched by a mob one morning, and that is where he displayed his nerve.

"The lynchers took the keys and unlocked the doors and went into the cell where Reed was. He was smoking a cigar when the men came in, and when he saw them he looked up as cool as you please. 'Good evening, gentlemen: I suppose you are going to take me out and hang me,' he said, as nonchalantly as though he was asking them to take a drink. He was told that he was correct in his supposition.

"He got up as unconcernedly as you please, and, putting on his coat, he remarked that he was all ready if the rest were. He walked through the jail and out into the moonlight, still smoking his cigar, and even making rings of the smoke. He simply glanced up at the moon, and, turning to one of the men, asked him where he was going to be swung off, saying that it was of no use walking a man a mile or two out into the country.

"He was marched up the street to a telegraph pole that stood in the very heart of the town. By this time half the townspeople were around. A rope had been brought along, and it was slipped over his head and he was bound. 'I can't climb that pole and fall off. I ought to have a ladder so as I can get up,' he said, and accordingly a ladder was brought and placed against the pole. He was asked if he had anything to say, and remarked that he hadn't, and if he had he wouldn't.

"When the ladder was placed against the pole one of the men started to tie one end of the rope about the pole.

"You needn't do that,' he said, 'for if you will unwind these cords about my wrists I'll do it.' The cords were unwound, and he climbed up the pole as far as the ladder reached and fastened the rope around the pole. When he had done this he looked around over the crowd, standing very quietly then, and called out:—

"'Good by, boys.'

"With that he jumped off the ladder, and in a few minutes his lifeless body was swinging there. His nerve never forsook him once. He acted through it all just as though he was used to it. He was the nerviest man I ever met."—Omaha World-Herald.

READY FOR ANYTHING.

One of the Massachusetts congressmen lives near Boston. He has a beautiful estate, his admiration of which is shared by his coachman, Mike. The other day Mike brought a couple of his Irish friends upon the place, and after escorting them around the grounds and showing them the stable, ushered them into the hall. There, somewhat to his surprise, he met his employer, but the latter was determined not to be outdone in hospitality by his coachman. "Bring your friends right into the dining room, Mike," he said, and into the dining room the trio followed him.

"Now, my men, of course you can have what you like," he remarked, as he stood by the sideboard; "but I have a drink here that I think you will like. There is a story to it, by the way," he added, "which may interest you. It is called Benedictine, and it is made by Monks up on the Alps. They fill a little flask with it and send out their St. Bernard dogs to find travelers who may be overcome by the cold. When a poor, half-frozen fellow is found he drinks a little of this cordial from the flask, and then he is able to follow the dogs to a place of shelter."

The men listened to the story in silence. Finally one of them mustered up courage to speak. "Have you any gin?" he asked.

"Certainly," said the congressman, as he laid aside the cordial." Help yourself."

The men took a good, substantial drink of gin and smiled happily over its familiar taste.

"That wasn't bad," said one of them. "Now bring on your dog liquor."—Washington Post.

"How shall we shun the wood pile of life?" said Mr. Gratebar. "There's the wood, free to all, with the sawbuck and the bucksaw standing by, but we go all around 'em and pick up chips rather than saw wood. We don't want to work; we want an easy job; we have a vague sort of an idea that wood will come and pile itself up in the cellar. But it won't. If we want a bright fire on the hearth, we must tackle the wood pile manfully."—New York Sun.

Marvelous Results.

From a letter written by Rev. J. Gunderman, of Dimondale, Mich., we are permitted to make this extract: "I have no hesitation in recommending Dr. King's New Discovery, as the results were almost marvelous in the case of my wife. While I was pastor of the Baptist church at Rivers Junction she was brought down with pneumonia succeeding la grippe. Terrible paroxysms of coughing would last hours with little interruption, and it seemed as if she could not survive them. A friend recommended Dr. King's New Discovery; it was quick in its work and highly satisfactory in results." Trial bottles free of LeGro & Lynde, Palmer; G. L. Keeney, Monson; F. A. Spencer, Ware. Regular size 50c and $1.00.

Electric Bitters.

Electric Bitters is a medicine suited for any season, but perhaps more generally needed in the spring, when the languid exhausted feeling prevails, when the liver is torpid and sluggish and the need of a tonic and alterative is felt. A prompt use of the medicine has often averted long and perhaps fatal bilious fevers. No medicine will act more surely in counteracting and freeing the system from the malarial poison. Headache, indigestion, consumption, dizziness yield to Electric Bitters. Only fifty cents per bottle of LeGro & Lynde, Palmer; G. L. Keeney, Monson; F. A. Spencer, Ware.

Bucklen's Arnica Salve.

THE BEST SALVE in the world for cuts bruises, sores, ulcers, salt rheum, fever sores, tetter, chapped hands, chilblains, corns, and all skin eruptions, and positively cures piles, or no pay required. It is guaranteed to give perfect satisfaction or money refunded. Price 25 cents per box. For sale by LeGro & Lynde, Palmer; G. L. Keeney, Monson; F. A. Spencer, Ware.

WISH'T HE WAS TER HUM.—The late Prof. Stephen J. Young of Bowdoin was an accomplished linguist. One day he was on a train bound from Bangor to Brunswick, when a conductor who knew him entered the car to ask him to come out to the second-class coach to try and find out where a certain stupid foreigner was going. The conductor had attacked him in all the foreign lingo he could muster, and could get no other response than a stupid stare. Prof. Young went back to the rear of the train. The passenger sat there looking very much disturbed and bewildered. The professor went at him in Canadian French, then in German, then in the languages of Scandinavia, Egypt, Italy, Spain and every other country on the face of this green earth. Still the passenger sat "mum as an owl," while the look of bewilderment deepened on his face. The professor was nonplussed, and was about returning in defeat to his own car when the man looked wearily out of the window and remarked sadly to himself: "By gosh, I wish I was ter hum." He was an Aroostook Yankee, and could speak nothing but English.—Portland Argus.

Dangerous Drugs.

Avoid the use of white or pink headache powders, they contain dangerous drugs. Taylor's Anti-Headache Powders are brown; they look like ground coffee and they have a delightful aromatic taste. Try them once and you will never be without them. Get them of LeGro & Lynde.

Colds are serious things. They lead to worse things. A cold is the seed of consumption. Croup is a cold's half-brother—it is generally caused by cold, and many a little life has been snuffed out by it because the proper remedy was not at hand.

Dr. Hooker's Cough and Croup Syrup

gives relief at once. It has saved thousands of lives. Every mother should see that it is always in the house. Don't wait till you need it—that may be too late. Contains no opium—absolutely safe—endorsed by physicians for 50 years. Made only by Charles B. Kingsley, Northampton, Mass.

Affinity.

In an old world temple two blocks of stone,
Where the sky of Athens burns hotly blue,
Have been standing stately, and still, and lone,
Dreaming together the ages through.

There were two pearls hid in the self same shell
(Like sweet sea tears that for Venus weep)
They have whispered secrets that none may tell,
Side by side in the heart of the deep.

When Boabdil ruled in the land of Spain,
Two roses grew in a garden rare;
They drank of the fountain's silver rain,
And mingled their scents in the drowsy air.

In Venice, to rest on a golden dome,
Two doves came floating on pinions white;
And they loved each other, and made their home
Under the stars on a still May night.

But the changeless laws that our lives involve
Are the laws of death and cold decay;
So the temples fall, and the pearls dissolve—
The birds and the roses must pass away.

Yet each, by a strange metamorphosis,
Is born anew in some fairer form;
So the roses may live in red lips that kiss—
The marble in limbs that are white and warm.

And in the hearts of lovers once more may greet
Those doves who dwelt on the dome of gold;
And in the mouths of velvet the pearls may meet
To gleam more white than those pearls of old.

For how otherwise grew the wonderous birth
Of the strange and sweet affinity,
That warns two souls in this desert of earth,
They must claim each other where'er they be?

They recall, in a new found ecstasy,
The dreams of their mystic long ago;
By the marble temple, or stormy sea,
Or Moorish garden where roses blow.

And they feel the flutter of snowy wings
On the golden dome of a stately fane;
And the faithful atoms the wild wind brings
Must find each other and love again!

So, my heart that within me burns and glows,
Would read your heart, and ask you whether
You were pearl, or marble, or dove, or rose,
In that fairer world, when we were together.

—After Gautier, by Florence Henniker.

PA'S WOOING.

"Don't you think pa's kind of odd lately, Zenas?"

The man to whom this question was put was sitting at the other side of a small table which was placed against the wall in the kitchen. The breakfast was spread upon this table.

Mr. Simpson paused momentarily in the act of chasing a few peas around on his plate with a knife with a view to eating the peas.

"No; I ain't noticed nothin'," said he, slowly. "Guess you're gettin' notional."

Mrs. Simpson was slowly sipping tea from her saucer, occasionally dipping a doughnut in her drink.

"I don't think men can see things 'less they're chucked right under their noses, 'n' their heads rapped at the same time," she remarked with some disdain. "I've be'n noticin' of it for more'n a month; 'n' I don't know what to make of it."

Mr. Simpson leaned back in his chair.

"Old gentleman ain't thinkin' of marryin' agin', is he?" he responded.

Mrs. Simpson flushed all over her thin, nervous face as she replied:—

"Course he ain't! Marryin'! Why, he's in his eightieth year! Besides," with an air of relief, "there ain't no woman 'round that'd have him."

"Needn't be so sure of that," said Zenas, more quickly than he had yet spoken. "Women'll have anybody; don't make no difference what."

Here the speaker laughed again. As the present Mrs. Simpson was this man's third wife, she now remained discreetly silent.

The couple were living in Mr. Littlefield's house; for this reason Zenas could let his own house and have the rent money to use. Zenas was forehanded, but the fact did not prevent its being a very good arrangement that they should all live in the old man's house. Mr. Simpson could not remember that he had ever been able to make quite so advantageous an arrangement with any of the men who had been his father-in-law. His own suggestion that his wife's father was thinking of marrying again began really to worry him.

He was frowning and fingering a toothpick, when the door opened, and a tall heavy-built man entered, and walked to his place at the table.

Mrs. Simpson looked at him and exclaimed:—

"Why, father!"

Mr. Simpson also looked and exclaimed. But he said:—

"Oh, thunder!"

The elder man hurriedly extended his cup for coffee. He grew red in the face as he tried to smile unconcernedly.

"What's the matter now?" he asked. "You seem kind er s'prised 'bout something. Lyddy, I wish you'd pass me the sugar."

The daughter passed the sugar. She continued to gaze at her father, who had the appearance of a well-preserved man of seventy.

"I didn't hardly know you," she said. "I ain't never seen you 'thout your whiskers sence I c'n remember."

Mr. Littlefield put his hand complacently over his long, white mustache. He had always worn a full beard.

"Thought I'd try shavin'," he remarked. "I did it myself. My hand's jest as stiddy"—

He held up his hand as he spoke, and glanced about him with pride. There was a slight tremor in the fingers, but not enough to proclaim his eighty years.

Suddenly he sat back in his chair. His fresh, ruddy face grew grave.

"We ain't arst no blessin' on our victuals," he said.

"That's a fact," responded Zenas. "Go ahead, pa."

Pa bent his head. His voice quavered somewhat as he began:—

"Heavenly Father, for what we are about to receive make us duly thankful. Amen."

For more than forty years Lyddy had heard this blessing at every meal when her father had been present.

She felt it to be an ill omen that he had forgotten it for a moment, even though he was late.

She sat back in her chair and looked at him furtively. How strange his face was without his beard, and with that mustache sweeping back at each side!

"I declare, pa," she broke out, 'I feel kinder lost seein' you so. What made you do it?"

"I've been thinkin' of it this some time," was the answer. "'N' finally I thought I'd do it 'fore the convention meets over to Gurley. I s'pose you're going, ain't you, Lyddy?"

Mr. Littlefield was making a very good breakfast, not withstanding his recent interesting experience with his toilet.

"No," said Lyddy, "I ain' goin.' I never was no hand to gad, you know, pa."

Mr. Littlefield looked disappointed.

Mr. Simpson shoved his chair gratingly away from the table as he remarked that he 'n' Liddy didn't have no time to go 'bout the country to conventions.

"I didn't know but, bein' Baptists, you'd be thinkin' of attendin'," was the response.

The old genleman presently added that there "wan't never anybody to go anywhere with him." He was always alone.

His daughter stared at him in silence. It was true that she did not go anywhere with her father. But, then, she did not go anywhere with any one. She always stayed at home. She was busy. She knew that her father was around; but she did not notice him any more than she noticed the old dog who slept in different out-of-the-way places.

And she did not care for dogs, though she intended to treat them well. She cooked, washed and ironed for her father. If he should be sick, she would take "first-rate care" of him.

But he never was sick. She supposed he would be, sometime. And old folks died.

It never occurred to Mrs. Simpson that she was not the best kind of a daughter, or that her father did not have the best kind of a time.

The man who drove the depot wagon always flung out the Boston daily paper which Mr. Littlefield had bought for years. It was true that Zenas, if he were at home, always got the paper and had the first reading of it; but the old man had it pretty soon, anyway; and he always seemed to read every inch of it.

Neither Mr. Simpson nor his wife said much to Mr. Littlefield. Unconsciously, Lyddy had in her mind placed her father somewhat outside the pale of the common interests that absorbed her. He was old; of course, old folks didn't care about things as they used to care. She herself was over fifty, but that was different.

Lyddy had noticed sometimes that her father's face had a kind of wistful, lonesome look as he sat with his paper on his knee after he had read it, or as he waited for Zenas to finish reading it.

But she never thought much about that look.

The next day he said to her that he "couldn't help kinder wishin' she was goin' to that convention. There'd be some first-rate ministers there."

"'Tain't no use for me to think of it," she replied, shortly. "You c'n go. You ain't got nothin' else to do."

"But it's kinder lonesome, never havin' nobody with ye," said Mr. Littlefield. "'N' you know I'm what you'd call a sociable sort of a man, Lyddy. Your mother always said I was real sociable."

The speaker was standing at the window in the kitchen, with his cane in his hand, and his hat on the back of his head. Lyddy did not look up from the milkpail; she was washing it at the sink. She only said, with a careless contempt, that "old folks always would take queer notions."

Her father stood a moment longer. He stroked his mustache, and he straightened up involuntarily as he did so. But he was conscious that he did not get much comfort from this caress of the mustache.

He walked to the end of the kitchen, where his bedroom was. He put his hat and his cane on the bed. He moved somewhat aimlessly about the small room.

A large lilac grew in front of the one window. In that lilac a pair of robins had built a nest, and the young ones were now sitting there in constant expectation of the arrival of one or both parents with worms.

Mr. Littlefield sat down in the chair by the window, and leaned forward to watch the birds. Presently the father and mother came, the mouths gaped and swallowed.

"They ain't lonesome," said Mr. Littlefield aloud. "I'm a real sociable man. Lyddy's mother used to say so. I ain't one of them kind that likes to be alone. There ain't nobody nowdays that wants me with 'em."

The florid, still handsome old face broke from its usual lines; the mouth under the mustache began to tremble with self-pity. The corded hands resting on the chair arms shut tightly.

The old man sat there a few moments. Then he rose and knelt down by the bed. He was obliged to guard his movements, though he was young for his years.

He always prayed night and morning, kneeling by his bed, but he could not remember that he had ever prayed in the daytime like this; and the fact naturally added an importance to the function in his own eyes, and he could not help thinking that it would have the same effect in the eyes of God also.

The uncertain whisper became audible.

"Oh, Lord, thou knowest how I am situated. I need a companion. Lord, if, in thy wisdom, thou thinkest it best, I pray thee send me a companion. Thou knowest I have property enough to be real comfortable, and leave Lyddy something, too. I pray thee, Lord, think about a companion for my declining years. For Christ sake, Amen."

Just as he had said "amen," his daughter opened the door. She sank back. She thought her father had gone out, and she came with a broom in her hand.

She was startled. She understood about praying night and morning, but it did not seem necessary to address the Lord at other times.

The old man was a little hard of hearing and he had not noticed the opening of the door.

He placed his hands on the side of the bed, and braced himself, so that he could rise more easily.

He saw Lyddy and he became confused.

"Why, pa!" she exclaimed.

She had vague thoughts of sending for the doctor. When a man goes and prays after breakfast, after having prayed before breakfast, she felt as if something ought to be done.

"Does your stomach seem to be out of order, pa?" she asked.

"Stomach, no!" was the response.

Mr. Littlefield reached forward and took his hand from the bed, planted it firmly on the floor, and leaned heavily on it, as he confronted the woman in the doorway.

"I've been addressing my Maker," he said, solemnly.

"Ain't you's well as common?" she asked.

"Yes, I be."

At this point the old man began to waver from his attitude.

"I was kinder lonesome," he said. "'n' I thought I'd make a bit of a prayer. God hears prayers, you know, Lyddy."

"Lonesome?" repeated Lyddy, now beginning to be irritated. "I don't see how you c'n say that when me 'n' Zenas are round here all the time.

"I know you be. But somehow I'm outside. I d'know how 'tis, but I be outside."

His voice was pitched in the high note of age as he went on, "Your mother always said I was a real sociable man, Lyddy."

"Do you want me to sit down 'n' spend my time talkin' with you?"

Mrs. Simpson put this inquiry with some scorn. She went on: "If you do, I c'n tell you I'v got my work standin' round waitin' to be done."

"'Taint that," said Mr. Littlefield, "but I'm outside."

Lyddy turned away with her broom. She took her implement into the back porch, which she swept with much vigor. She hadn't any patience with her father when he told her he was "outside." What did he mean? Outside of what? She had a fleeting thought that she would try to go with him to that convention, but she didn't see how in the world she could do it. There was always butter to make, if nothing else.

Three days later, when the morning came, she had given up all such intention, if she could be said to have had it. But, as she fastened her father's necktie, she did say to him that she would go if she "wa'nt driven to death." The old face above her looked so pleased and grateful at these words that Lyddy's heart gave a curious, quick beat of something like pain.

"I am mighty glad you thought of it," he said.

She watched him walk down the path to take the depot wagon.

"He's a real good-lookin' old man, if he is my father," she said to herself.

"Old gentleman's quite chirk, ain,t he?" said Zenas, with his laugh. Lyddy did not know why the tone and the laugh grated so upon her.

"Mebby he'll be makin' up to some gal over to the convention," remarked Zenas, chuckling.

Mr. Littlefield conversed affably with the three other people in the depot wagon. They were going to Gurley to the convention, but when they arrived they separated themselves from him.

After Mr. Littlefield had taken his place in the church, he bent his head forward to the back of the pew in front of him, and repeated in a whisper the petition to the Lord for a companion.

The repeating of this prayer seemed to put the maker of it in good spirits. He rose with cheerful agility to let a woman pass into the pew, for the people were beginning to come in faster now.

When he sat down again he stroked his mustache; then he turned and looked at the woman sitting a few feet away from him. He pretended that he was gazing beyond her at something the other side of the church.

He noticed that her gray hair was wavy, and he thought it was pretty. She had a dark face, with lines and wrinkles all over it; but for all those lines and wrinkles it had a certain fresh appearance. As he watched her she bowed and smiled, greeting some one who came into the seat opposite. The smile seemed to warm Mr. Littlefield's lonely heart. He sat up erect. He wished he knew some way to get introduced. He remembered his prayer. It might be that the Lord's will to answer it favorably.

When the hymn was given out the woman found the place and handed the book to the old man. He took it with a trembling hand. He was inwardly glad that he had shaved off that long gray beard.

He tried to hear the speaking by the different ministers, but his mind wandered in a vague, pleasant way, and he found that he could not follow their words.

At noon tickets were given to the people from out of town by the residents. Each ticket bore a name and address, and entitled the bearer to a dinner.

These conventions were a generally hospitable time among the Baptists.

Mr. Littlefield took his bit of pasteboard, found the right street and the right house, and when he reached the yard he flung up his head and walked smartly up the path.

He could not help a little start when the woman with the gray hair opened the door to him. Then he gathered himself up and said gallantly:—

"Guess I'm in luck this time to git sent here."

The two sat alone at the dinner table. After the first cup of tea they began to talk.

Does any one call youth frank? There is nothing like the frankness of age, and nothing like age for the asking of leading questions.

As he stirred his cream and tea Mr. Littlefield inquired:—

"Is your husband living?" Mrs. Tate looked steadily down itno her teacup as she answered:—

"The Lord took Mr. Tate five years ago the 17th of last February. He had old-fashioned consumption. He was sick a long time."

"It must have be'n real wearin' to you, Mis' Tate."

Mr. Littlefield spoke with unction. The years seemed to roll off him. To sit opposite this woman, and ta.k with her, while he drank excellent tea and ate an excellent dinner, was having the effect of a miracle upon him.

"'Twas wearin'," was the response, "but the Lord helped me bear it."

The man liked this reference to the Lord.

He was silent for a moment. Then he passed his cup a third time.

"I d'know when I've drunk such tea," he said. "What kind do you use, Mis' Tate?"

"Reg'lar black. But I guess it's in the steepin'."

"I guess likely 'tis. Lyddy, she's apt to bile her tea."

"It spoils tea to bile it," remarked Mrs. Tate.

"So I tell um."

Another short silence.

"Is this house your'n?" suddenly asked Mr. Littlefield.

"No, 'tain't. But I have the use of it as long as I live; or till"—

The speaker paused, and a dull red crept over her face.

"Till what?"

"I marry. But 'tain't no ways likely I sh'll marry again."

"I don't know about that," returned Mr. Littlefield with a great deal of meaning. "A lady like you, young lookin' 's you be, must have lots of chances."

Mrs. Tate made no reply to this save by a conscious smile.

"Lots of chances," repeated the man, boldly.

Suddenly Mr. Littlefield began to dilate upon the lonely condition of a widower, even though he lived with his married daughter. He went on to explain that he owned a house, that he had $6000 in the bank, and that if he should take another wife, he should give her $1000 outright. He said he never had been mean, and he wan't goin' to begin now.

"You don't know nothin' 'bout me," he went on, speaking faster and faster, "but you c'n send anybody over to Winslow, 'n' have um ask all they want to, 'n' if things ain't 's I say, why"—

The speaker paused. He was gazing at the woman opposite him, and thinking how pleasant her face was, and what a good housekeeper she seemed to be, and how good her tea tasted.

"If you ain't no objections," he began again, "I wish you'd git somebody to go over to Winslow, will you?"

Mrs. Tate was folding her napkin contemplatively. She glanced up at the sturdy face opposite her.

"You said your daughter lived there," she remarked.

"Yes; but Zenas, he's got a house, 'n' they c'n move there. Ye see, "confidentially, "they've got other interests, 'n' I'm tired of bein' an outsider. I've been an outsider ever sence Lyddy's mother died. The Lord seems to have led me here. The Lord's hand is in it."

"I guess I'll send Deacon Miller over to Winslow some time next week," said Mrs. Tate. How old be ye, Mr. Littlefield?"

The man passed his hand over his mustache. He hesitated an instant, then he answered: "I shall be seventy-three next August."

And to himself he said: "So I shall be seventy-three then?"

He could not put that question to the woman sitting there But Mrs. Tate remarked, with great apparent frankness:—

"'Tain't no use keepin' such things hid. I was fifty-six last birthday."

She was sixty-three last birthday.

Mr. Littlefield came up bravely with his rejoinder. "You was!" he exclaimed. "It's astonishing how young you look."

Deacon Miller was duly sent to Winslow to make investigation. When he came back he told Mrs. Tate that everything was just as Mr. Littlefield had said, only—. Here he paused and grinned.

"Only wi.at?" impatiently.

In the mean time the widower had paid the widow several visits and the courting was advanced wonderfully, as is the way with widowers.

"He's eighty years old—or will be in August."

Mrs. Tate smiled.

"'Tain't much matter," she replied.

So it happened that Zenas had to take his wife to his own home before the summer was over. He swore about it. He said Lyddy's pa ought to be put in an asylum. He began to say something extremely disrespectful about widowers, but Lyddy looked at him so strangely that he remembered and did not finish his sentence.

Mr. Littlefield carried himself with the air of a conquering hero. He talked of Mrs. Tate to every one who would listen. He said that some folks didn't believe that God answered prayer, but, as for him, he was sorry for "them kind of folks." Mr. Simpson would not allow his wife to go to the wedding. He said "it was all a mass of tomfoolery; and, likely's not it never'd have come about if she'd had sense enough to have went to that convention with the old man."—Maria Louise Pool, in New York Tribune.

A RATTLESNAKE'S GRATITUDE.

Edward B. Haymond, one of San Francisco's barristers, has been a close student of natural history, and has succeeded in gathering some very interesting information regarding the birds of the air, the beasts of the land, the fishes of the sea. Incidentally, he has been able to collect a few snake statistics, says the San Francisco Call.

"I once knew a case," said Mr. Haymond to some listeners, "wherein a snake displayed not only an unusual amount of courage. It appears that some years ago a professor of natural history from an eastern university was sent to the southern part of Yucatan to investigate the snakes of that section. I might state that he was a very humane man and frequently displayed it. One afternoon while walking over a desert, thinking of little but the time he would arrive at the camp, he heard a peculiar rattling sound that seemed to come from under a pile of rocks. He at once made an investigation and was rewarded by the discovery of a mastodon rattlesnake, which he was on the point of despatching so as to put it out of misery, as the rock had so fallen that a portion of the snake's body was badly mangled and torn. In the matter of taking the reptile's life he hesitated, owing to the pathetic and pleading expression in the wounded creature's eyes. It quite unnerved him, so he rolled the rocks off and awaited results in the shape of very pronounced gratitude.

"The delighted and thankful creature wriggled over to him and rubbed his leg with a grateful air that was bound to last. The professor was moved by this exhibition, and, having some cotton in his valise, he bound up the wounded part and left the snake as comfortable as possible. The next day he left Yucatan for Guatemala and was gone over five years. On his return to Yucatan he again had occasion to pass over the desert, and, greatly to his surprise, encountered the same reptile a few miles from where the previous incident had occurred. The recognition was mutual, and the joyful rattle coiled about his leg, licked his hand with a friendly tongue, and showed marked and industrious appreciation. When the professor took up his march again the snake followed him and even insisted upon getting into the wagon and becoming a regular occupant."

"Look here, Edgar, ain't you going a little too far with that yarn?" inquired a friend.

"Not as far as the snake is going. To continue: He finally got back East and had for a traveling companion the same snake, which was allowed to wander at will. As a natural consequence the professor and his dumb companion became the best of chums, and it was a common thing to see the naturalist walking out in the road with the snake gliding along beside him. Well—now here comes the real point of the story—one night after the professor had retired and left the snake down stairs in the dining-room he was suddenly awakened by the crash of glass, followed by the falling of a heavy body. He rose up in his bed only to hear a groan and the crushing of bones. In a flash he bounded into his dressing gown and repaired to the room whence came the sounds of strife. Imagine his horror on striking a light to see his pet snake coiled round a man's bleeding body, which it had lashed to the stove and was hugging violently. On the floor was a burglar's dark lantern and a kit of tools, while the snake, in order to display its presence of mind, had his tail out of the window—"

"What for?" inquired a listener in breathless excitement.

"Rattling for a policeman."

HE FELT SO DECAYED.—There is in the city a certain young attache to one of the legations who has communicated to the world his resolve to eschew its pleasures for the present. This determination is by no means due to the fact of a cold shoulder being turned toward him by the fashionables, but on account of the numerous conversational slips that he is conscious of making. Telling of a certain occasion where he "put in ze foot" more than usual, he says: "I talk to ze ladies and smile and be agreeable, and all at once zey grow quiet and look at me so var' queer. I exclaim, 'What haf I done?' and ze ladies zey make answer, 'It is not what you haf done, monsieur, but what you have said.' And zen I feel so decayed, oh, so decayed."

PALMER NEWS.

The Year in Which There Was No Summer.

A Belchertown correspondent writes to the JOURNAL that "Some people have a wrong idea as to the date of the year in which there was no summer. It was in 1816, and that year has been called the year without a summer. There were sharp frosts every month. There are old farmers still living in Connecticut who remember it well, and it was often referred to as the year eighteen hundred and starve to death. January was mild, also was February, with the exception of a few days; the greater part of March was cold and boisterous; April opened warm, but grew colder as it advanced, ending with snow and ice and winter cold; in May ice formed half an inch thick, buds and flowers were frozen and corn killed; frost, ice and snow were common in June, almost everything was killed and the fruit was nearly all destroyed, snow fell to the depth of three inches in New York and Massachusetts, and ten inches in Maine; July was accompanied by frost and ice, and on the 5th ice formed to the thickness of glass in New York, New England and Pennsylvania, and the corn was nearly all destroyed in certain sections; in August ice formed half an inch thick; cold and northwest winds prevailed nearly all summer, and corn was so frozen that a great deal was cut down and dried for fodder, very little of it ripened in New England and scarcely any in the Middle states, farmers being obliged to pay $4 and $5 a bushel for corn of 1816 for seed for the next spring's planting; the first two weeks in September were mild but the rest of the month was cold, with frost and ice almost a quarter of an inch thick; October was more than usually cold, with frost and ice; November was cold and blustering, with snow enough for good sleighing; December was quite mild and comfortable."

Praise for the Firemen.

The Springfield Union of last Friday, in giving an account of the fire in C. E. Fuller's barn on South Main street the day before, took occasion to "roast" the Palmer fire department severely for inefficiency, inexperience, and general fool work all around. There are few who know the facts about the fire and the way in which it was handled who will agree that the fire department is deserving of blame. When the department arrived on the scene, which was in a very few moments after the ringing of the alarm,—a horse taking the "jumper" and men at once to the fire,—the interior of the barn was all ablaze. Notwithstanding this, the fire was not only soon extinguished, but was confined to the building in which it started, and the timbers and sides left in fairly good shape. Mr. Fuller states that while the timbers are pretty well charred, not one of them was burned off, and that not one has fallen. He is perfectly satisfied with the work of the fire department, and has expressed himself pretty freely regarding the Union's article. The department received the highest praise from the insurance adjustor who came to settle the loss on the building. He has been in the business for many years, and when he had looked over the building and been told the circumstances of the fire, stated that he had no criticism to offer; he was only surprised that any of the building was left standing. There is no danger but that the fire boys will keep the record of the department up to the high mark which it gained in the Loomis block and opera house fires.

The Public Schools as Some People See Them.

The following is taken from last Saturday's issue of the American Citizen, a weekly paper published in Boston:

FROM PALMER, MASS.

Editor of the Citizen:—Palmer is a manufacturing town and is made up of several villages: Three Rivers, Thorndike, Bondsville, and the depot village called Palmer. Each of the villages is supplied with churches, schools and stores, but the public buildings are in Palmer village.

The spider (Romanism) is quietly spinning his web around the public buildings, and catches many flies who are looking for offices in town. The manager of the Palmer Journal is in the web, having often assailed the A. P. A.s, and as a reward has been appointed on the board of school committee in place of one resigned—the chairman of both school committee and selectmen being a Roman Catholic.

The public schools are in the web, as the spider is at the head of the school committee, with superintendent and two of said committee as flies. The other three are true Americans who are not aggressive, and therefore Rome rules.

LAST SATURDAY'S SKATING CARNIVAL AT THREE RIVERS.

Many Fancy Costumes, and a Jolly Time for All.

Nothing could have been more perfect than the weather last Saturday afternoon and evening for the skating carnival on the pond. There were hundreds of spectators, and the merry skaters kept time to the lively tunes of the orchestra. These were some of the costumes worn in the afternoon: Miss Nettie Trickett, long white gown, green trimmings, green bells, hat of green and white; Ella Holt, pink skirt, dark jacket with pink trimmings; Edith Gray, white gown ornamented with red and blue stars, red sash, long white skating cap with stars and flags; the "jingle bells' wore black costumes with white puff ball trimming on the bottom of skirts, long streamers of pea green and pink ribbon ornamented with different kinds of bells were suspended from the waist and hung down over the skirts, strings of many colored beads covered the front of the jackets, white caps with bells; Sadie Holt, yellow skirt, white trimmings, yellow ribbons; Minnie Hamilton, black satin dress, red and blue trimmings, large black beaver hat; Nellie Conroy and the Misses Lane, black and brown suits covered with bows of different colors; a certain gentleman with black chin whiskers and mustache, unknown to some, wore a French "Tally Ho" suit consisting of white pants and black leggins, blue coat with brass buttons, yellow silk sash, black silk hat, and bugle horn; F. E. Hillman, silk hat, black pants with yellow stripes, a very elaborate French sash; Clayton Barnes, suit of fancy creton; Merton Twogood, suit of stars and stripes. The evening was more enjoyable than the afternoon, if that were possible. The Thorndike brass band was in attendance and played very acceptably. In the center of the pond was erected a booth supplied with seats and other necessaries for the musicians, and from this floated flags and Japanese lanterns. C. P. Haynes furnished wood for a bonfire which was built directly in front of the booth, and with headlights put up in different places the pond was well illuminated. Some noticable costumes were worn. The Misses Twiss were resplendent in costumes of various colors, spangled and trimmed with eiderdown, and they wore some very pretty and tasteful coiffures; two young men were dressed to represent the "new man," but the "new woman" did not appear, much to their chagrin; Charles Freak represented his "Satanic Majesty" in a suit of red, with horns, and when stationed near the bonfire no doubt felt very much at home. There were many more original and unique costumes, to the designers of which much credit was due. The whole was a decided success, and perfect order prevailed. It is intended to repeat the carnival one week from to-morrow, Feb. 1st. Should the weather or ice not prove favorable the dates of Feb. 8th or 15th are set. It is hoped that those attending from out of town will come in fancy costumes if possible.

The cut above shows a portion of the pond at one of the liveliest moments of the afternoon, the photograph for which was taken expressly for the JOURNAL by Woodhead of Palmer. Large photographs of the above, and also a nearer view, showing a group of skaters in costume, can be had at the studio.

The apparatus at the telephone office has been increased this week by the addition of a power electric generator, which enables the operators to ring in a call without having to turn the crank of a hand generator, as heretofore. The generator is connected with the machinery in Holden & Fuller's mill, and is available only through the hours when the mill is running, but the busy season in the exchange is covered, and the operators get along very well at other times with the old method.

Miss Linda Brigham gave her lecture on Saxony before the Sorosis Club of New York Monday afternoon. The New York Tribune said of her lecture: "Miss Linda Hawley Brigham gave an interesting account of her experiences during 'A Year in Saxony.' Her description of places of note in Dresden and of the life and customs of the German family with whom she lived were well received by the audience." Since her return Miss Brigham has been engaged to appear before another New York audience in March.

Woolrich & Company are making preparations for the extensive advertising of Ridge's Food, and have placed an order with the JOURNAL job department for 400,000 circulars, the paper for which will weigh a ton and three-quarters. Woolrich & Co., besides which the JOURNAL presses have this week turned off other work for this firm which will bring the total number of pieces nearly if not quite up to the half million mark.

A collation will be served after the work, and a grand good time is expected.

Marshall L. Hitchcock, at one time a prominent business man of Thorndike, was brought to the town farm from Boston Tuesday, but was taken away again the same night by his son. The circumstances of Mr. Hitchcock's coming to the town farm were somewhat peculiar. He was injured on the street in Boston and taken to a hospital, by his son, who left no address, though he called to see him several times. He was finally well enough to be discharged, and finding that he had lived in Palmer the authorities here were notified to come and get him. They did so, and later Mr. Hitchcock's son found what had become of him and followed to Palmer, taking his father back with him.

LEGISLATIVE MATTERS.

BOSTON, Jan. 22, 1896.

The following has been distributed in the boxes of the members of the House: "We believe that the present system of annual elections of state officers and of members of the Legislature is better for Massachusetts than any system of less frequent elections. Under this practice of frequent expressions of the popular will, of close accountability of political servants to the people, and of annual discussion of public affairs, which has been in force ever since the adoption of the constitution, our commonwealth has maintained a position excelled by no other, and we believe that it would be a mistake to adopt an amendment for biennial state elections. Alanson W. Beard, John D. Long, J. H. Walker, George Fred Williams, Robert S. Rantoul, Elihu B. Hayes, H. C. Thacher, John W. Corcoran, George F. Hoar, L. D. Apsley, W. S. Knox, George E. McNeill, W. E. Barrett, Edwin C. Miller, Henry S. Gere, B. E. Cook, Jr., Charles B. Rice, Benjamin F. Arrington, John L. Parker, Henry B. Blackwell, Henry Winn."

The advocates of biennials are also making a strong push for the passage of the amendment, and they have on their side President Eliot of Harvard College, Samuel B. Capen, H. L. Higginson, F. L. Higginson, Edward H. Haskell, S. Stillman Blanchard and many others well known in the community. Most of them are Republicans, but some are Democrats.

The Legislature has made one of the slowest starts on record. There does not seem to be any reason more than usual why there should be such delay, but it has occurred, and the first three weeks have seen fewer hearings than usual. In recent years, particularly, there has been more done by this time in January. A conspicuous exception is the finance committee, which has reported nearly 100 appropriation bills and has well discharged its function of keeping the wheels of government going.

Evidence accumulates that the taxation struggle of this year will be as hard as it has been in any of the previous years, and perhaps harder. The organization in favor of exempting laws is in first-class working shape. It has a strong president, ex-Senator William B. Durant of Cambridge. It has a strong team of directors; President Durant is to act as legislative counsel, and they have other help to keep them informed of the progress of events at the state house. On the other hand, the opposition does not yet put in an appearance. It is said that ex-Senator James W. Stockwell of Sutton will be organizer, the same as he has been in years past, and there is no doubt that a strong fight will be made by them. It is fortunate for the farmers who want exemption for their homesteads but are not able to secure it and therefore are opposed to the present plan for the exemption of municipal bonds and of foreign stock, that Representative J. A. Mellen of Worcester is in the House once more. He has always been a sharp fighter for the rights of the farmers, though he differs from the most of them in politics, and they have a very friendly feeling for him. He stands up for the poor men against the men who, he believes, want to escape from their rightful share of taxation. Of course this is not the ground upon which a question of taxation should be settled, but sympathy goes a long ways in the fight. The House members of the taxation committee are the same as the members of the House committee on ways and means, as far as they go, but there are only eight representatives of the taxation committee, while there are eleven on the committee on ways and means on the part of the House. Last year the anti-double taxation men lost their chance to debate, in the main, by putting in four bills and then having them come from the committee as one matter. When the first was defeated on the motion to substitute it for the report of the committee, there was no opportunity to offer either of the others as a substitute. The Legislature is already being carefully cultivated, and there will doubtless be a good deal of pressure put upon the members from their constituents who, in their turn, will be manipulated by wires pulled by their friends in Boston who are conducting the fight. No matter which side of the case one believes to be right, it is interesting to see the way these contests are managed.

Another one of the warm conflicts of the session promises to be over the destruction of the Bullfinch state house. There was introduced into the House Wednesday afternoon a bill to empower the present state house construction commission to demolish the Bullfinch building and to erect in its place one at a cost of not over $1,500,000, preserving as much as possible the contour of the present building, but extending the width and height. This is the same as a a bill which was defeated last year, and it will be opposed this year because it continues the power of the present commission. One of the proposed plans is that of Architect Albert W. Cobb, which proposes to widen the front 30 feet on each side and to raise the dome 30 feet and to put a colonnade around it, thereby making the elevation harmonize with other plans of Bullinch and giving it a far better effect in connection with the extension. But there is still another plan for opening a general competition for treatment of the entire problem by advertising for plans, either including the construction of a wholly new part, or by the preservation of the old as far as possible. Sentiment on one side and progress on the other, and the needs of business, will be the claims urged upon the Legislature.

A decided effort is going to be made to have the United States government help the state in the fight against the gypsy moth. An appropriation of $150,000 is probably to be asked for by the state from Congress. Senator Burns of Middlesex has been before the committee on federal relations, telling about the great concern the whole country has in the extermination of this pest, for it would doubtless spread all over the country within 10 years, if it were not for the efforts of Massachusetts, and the damage it would do within that time, said the senator, would be represented by a sum equal to the national debt. If the government had taken the potato bug when its attention was first called to it, it would probably not have passed beyond the Mississippi river. By neglecting its critical opportunity, the government permitted this scourge to devastate the country to the loss of an enormous amount of property, far more than would have been necessary to destroy it. Now, Massachusetts is protecting the country from great pecuniary loss, and it is believed to be no more than right that the national government should pay a part of the expense. Massachusetts has spent many hundred thousand dollars for this purpose, and much more money is needed. The state has tried the experiment once of asking the general government for an appropriation, but was refused. But the case is stronger every year. If Massachusetts shoulud cease to fight the moth vigorously, the whole Union would soon wish that they had stepped in and helped to kill the last of the pest.

The exapnsion of the street railway system of the state is going on rapidly. The committee gave a hearing Tuesday upon three petitions for the enlargement of the electric car field. One of them was for a new corporation to run cars between Amherst and Sunderland. Another was to run from Templeton Center to Gardner Depot, and the third was for an extension of the Pittsfield line into the town of Dalton. It is evident that the use of the trolley has stimulated intercommunication between the different towns, and there is a great future in Massachusetts for electric railways.

NEIGHBORHOOD NOTES.

MONSON.

A Dear Hunt, and How It Turned Out.

Last Saturday nine young men received notes which read something like this: "On Monday evening from 8 to 10 you are invited to attend a hunting frolic at the home of one of the following," and then came the names of nine young ladies. Each invitation was inclosed in an envelope on which was the picture of a Brownie and these words: "Catch me if you can." Of course the idea never for a moment found lodgment in the brains of these young men that to find the young ladies would be difficult, and one of them is said to have been willing to wager all the candy his mother could eat that the hunt would be over at 8 10. Ah! but wait! On Monday evening before 6.30 those young ladies had stowed themselves away in the attic of Miss Alice Park's home, and there, without a light, they proceeded to eat their supper. Now it may be supposed that entrance to that attic was an easy matter, but it was not; the opening was small, and it was necessary to make the ascent by means of a ladder. Once there, a covering of lath was so placed that there was only room between the strips for a person's head. Promptly at 8 the young men started on their round, which included besides Washington street, North Main, High, Main and Bridge streets. To the first two or three houses they went in a body, rummaging from garret to celler, looking into the most improbable places, peeping into barrels, pianos, etc., but as time went on they decided that diplomacy was a good thing if well applied, and so at the next two or three places one was sent ahead who ringing the door bell inquired with his prettiest bow and very best smile if Miss——was in; as this failed to fool any of the fathers and mothers and sisters and brothers, a council was held, resulting in the party caling at some of the houses a second time and leaving one member in a dark room, without the knowledge of the family, in order to hear what might be said. This plan was also a failure, although one young man stayed ten or fifteen minutes in the room leading to the place of concealment, during which time he stuck his head through the opening and gazed anxiously within. Finally the clock struck 10, and the ladies descended to the parlor, and there the young men found them chatting merrily when they appeared shortly after. One of the young men, it is related, had procured a beet which he had intended to present to the ladies with a neat little speech. Somehow the joke wasn't nearly so funny when it was turned, and he managed to forget to carry the beet home. Now the young men are racking their brains to see how they can do the square thing, and it is alleged that the caucus which has been held did not settle the matter; some think that a supper at either the Monson House or the Century Hotel would be about the figure, while others favor a theater party to Springfield, or a sleighride whenever there is snow enough. Meantime they do very little talking about it in public.

F. T. Sweet, Gardner. "Non-contributors in the Parish: how to enlist their sympathy and obtain their financial aid," Rev. B. F. Eaton, Worcester. "Transferred Families: the welcome they should receive in their new church home," Mrs. H. F. Moulton, Palmer. "Our Ecclesiastical Neighbors: how we may learn and profit by their improved methods of work." Mr. Cory F. Wood, Springfield. 5 30, general discussion. 6, supper and social hour. 7, devotional meeting. Addresses: "The Universalist Type of Piety," Rev. G. W. Penniman, Southbridge. Against Armenian Outrages.

Rev. Mr. Boulgourjon of Marash, Armenia, gave very interesting addresses on the subject of Armenia in the Congregational church Sunday morning and evening. In the evening he addressed a mass meeting of the citizens, at the close of which resolutions were adopted. Mr. Boulgourjon is thoroughly conversant with his subject, and his statements of the sufferings of his countrymen were very thrilling. A relief fund of $65 was collected during the meeting. The resolutions adopted were:

Whereas, the whole civilized world is now stirred by authentic reports to the effect that thousands of christian citizens of Armenia, unoffending and defenseless, have been and are being tortured and murdered, their homes plundered and deserted, their children deprived of food and shelter and their wives driven into a shameful captivity, and

Whereas, so far as can be learned, these people have commit ed no offence, but are peaceful, law-abiding citizens, who have become converts to the religion of Jesus Christ through the efforts of American missionaries, and

Whereas, these outrages were perpetrated with the sanction and approval of the Sultan of Turkey, whose power depends solely on the so-called Christian nations of Europe,

Therefore, be it resolved, that we, citizens of Warren, Massachusetts, in mass meeting assembled, do solemnly protest against this wholesale and wanton butchery. That we call upon the representative of this Congressional district, Hon. Frederick H. Gillett, and upon the senators from this commonwealth, Hon. George F. Hoar and Hon. Henry Cabot Lodge, to urge upon the government of these United States such diplomatic action as may be possible to the end that these atrocities may cease. And that we believe the government of Turkey a menace to civilization, we ask the aid of all in authority that by a union of all the "Great Powers" of Europe, this useless government may be blotted from the face of the earth.

A Man of 83 Commits Suicide.

Frank Amo, 83, a Wilbraham farmer living a mile north of Markham's hill on the Longmeadow road, three and a half miles from Wilbraham street, committed suicide Sunday morning just before 11 o'clock by shooting himself through the head with a 32-caliber pistol. He had had an abcess in his head for some time, and it is thought that he might have been temporarily insane when he committed the deed. He went to Springfield on Monday of last week and did not return until Thursday. On his return he complained that his head troubled him considerably, and Saturday night he talked in a manner which makes Mrs. Amo now think that the act was premeditated. Sunday morning, while sitting on the edge of his bed talking to his wife, he suddenly produced the pistol, which he had concealed in his underclothing, and flourished it about his head. Afterward he quieted down somewhat, and Mrs. Amo left him and soon after she heard one of her daughters scream and exclaim, 'Don't! Please father, don't!" The report of the weapon followed instantly.

Mrs. Amo ran into the room and found her husband lying on the bed with the pistol in his hand and the blood flowing from a wound in his right ear. She grasped his hand, but two or three convulsions were the only indications of life. He died about an hour later, apparently in great suffering. He leaves a widow with eight children, three married sons and five unmarried daughters, the latter from seven to 17 years old.

Mr. Amo was born in France in 1813, and came to this country about 1850. He was married three times, his last marriage being in 1866 to Caroline La Brack at South Hadley. The house he died in was built 19 years ago. While he was building this house he bought of a German the pistol with which he killed himself. He had not supported the family for about 12 years, Mrs. Amo earning most of the money. The family are left in quite destitute circumstances, Mrs. Amo having only a small plot of land given to her by her husband last April. It is understood that the family have had some difficulty in getting on with Amo. The funeral was held Tuesday afternoon at 1 o'clock, Rev. Mr. Howard officiating.

Sympathy for Armenia.

The large union meeting held in the Congregational church Sunday evening to hear Rev. G. H. Adalian on the situation in Armenia resulted in the appointment of a committee of representative citizens to memorialize Congress in resolutions of sympathy for the outraged Christians of the land, with the view to inspiring some effective national remonstrance and protest against the shameful inhumanity of the Mahomedan powers; also in the appointment of a committee, consisting of the pastors of the respective churches of the town, to solicit money for the immediate relief of the suffering thousands whom the Turks and Kurds have reduced to beggary and want and turned homeless and wandering into the winter cold. Half a million of our Christian brethren, whose only sin is an humble avowal of the Christian religion, whose homes therefor have been destroyed and whose property has been looted by the merciless and fanatical Mohamedans, are in immediate danger of starvation. The call of these afflicted and prosecuted people, the cry of Rachel again weeping for her children, appeals to our largest sympathies, and we should respond at once, according to our means and the sense of our humanity. Let us give generously, making ourselves richer thereby in a liberal gift to our Armenian brethren, whose pressing and sorrowful need is our Christian opportunity to help. The contributions at the union meeting were timely and gratifying, but it seemed wise to invite a larger constituency of our benevolent citizens to contribute to this very worthy cause. If, therefore, it would be a pleasure to you to give something, even the smallest sum, according to your ability, pass it to any of the pastors of the town, and be sure that it will find its way at once, through the proper channel, to the people who so sorely need it.

ALBERT C. WHITE, for the committee.

The committee on resolutions met Monday afternoon and unamimously adopted the following, and a copy has been fowarded to Hon. Frederick H. Gillett at Washington:

TO THE HONORABLE REPRESENTATIVES IN CONGRESS ASSEMBLED:—

Whereas, the undersigned have been appointed a committee in behalf of the Christian churches in Ware, to memorialize Congress in the interest of the persecuted and martyrized Christians of Asia Minor under the Turkish Government; and

Whereas, it is our concurrent opinion that it is the obvious and wicked determination of the Sultan of Turkey, his specious and reassuring protestations to the contrary, to exterminate an innocent and industrious people whose only offence is the profession of the Christian religion and superior progress in the arts of civilization:—

And whereas, we can but express our horror at the plunder, rapine, murder and starvation which the inhuman Turk is daily meeting out to these people of a different faith, the helpless victims to atrocities the details of which are terrible and sickening in the extreme, surpassing the scenes of the worst periods of Saracenic invasion in the seventh century, and culminating in the case of Armenia in the sum of human baseness and villainy:—

And whereas, we express our amazement at the seeming apathy of the Christian Powers to these unparalleled and satanic barbarities, and deprecate the policy which commits our own beloved Country to participancy in such indifference.—

It is resolved, therefore, that we pray you as representatives in the counsels of our Nation, a Nation hitherto conspicuous in its love of freedom and defence of the oppressed, to use your utmost intelligence, wisdom and influence in devising some means whereby the uncompromising moral sentiment of our country may be felt in bringing to a speedy termination the misrule and bad government of the Sultan of Turkey against our Armenian brethren.

And may the God of Nations who sifts the consciences of men, be your counselor and guide.

Respectfully submitted,

Commander Dean writes: "As Chief U. S. Mail Agent of the U. & D. R. R. good health is indispensable. I found myself however all run down with Dyspepsia. I doctored and doctored, but I grew worse. I suffered misery night and day, for fully two years. My case was pronounced incurable. I chanced to meet Dr. Kennedy about that time, and told him of my condition, and he said, try a bottle of

After using it a week I began to feel better, and in a short while after that I was entirely cured. That terrible distress, everything I ate breaking up sour in my throat, had all gone and I have not had a moment's discomfort since. To-day there isn't a healthier man, and my appetite is grand."

He kicked the moment he was born,
In a stalwart, lusty cry.
He kicked and howled in his babyhood,
Till the neighbors thought they'd die.
He kicked when first he went to school,
And he scratched the nurse-maid too.
He kicked on his college football team—
Yes, he kicked his whole life through.

He kicked right hard in politics,
Although he didn't vote;
And he kicked at the way the choir sang,
Though he couldn't sing a note.
He kicked the bucket finally,
And nobody mourned, you bet!
But, unless his legs have been burned off,
He is probably kicking yet.

A FAMOUS LION HUNTER'S CLOSE CALL.

Giving over my pony to one of the Somalis I walked slowly toward the lion, bidding Jama to remain in the saddle if he wished, but to keep as near as possible with the second gun. Very cautious and slow was my approach, for I did not want to bring on a charge before I had got in a shot, and it looked as if a too rapid advance would do so, for the lion, without stirring an inch, kept up a series of snarls and growls, giving me an excellent view of his teeth, accompanied all the while by short, sharp flicks of his tail on the ground. I walked up to within fifty yards of him, hoping to shoot him dead at that distance and so avoid a charge. I then sat down and fired at him between the eyes, jumping to my feet instinctively to be ready if he charged. It was not a bit too soon. At the shot the lion sprang up with a furious roar. I had a lightning glimpse of him rearing up on his hind legs pawing the air; then he came for me. It was a fierce rush across the ground, no springing that I could see. How close we got before I fired I cannot say, but it was very close. I let him come on, aiming the muzzles of the rifle at his chest. Jama says he was about to spring as I pulled the trigger and ran back a pace or two to one side; but as I did so, I saw through the smoke that the lion was stopped within a few paces of me. The second gun and Jama were not as near as they might have been. The lion struggled up on his hind quarters and uttered roars.

I rammed two fresh cartridges into my rifle in an instant and fired my right into him. The grand brute fell over dying. The Somalis set up a wild yell, and I am not sure I did not join in.—From "Wild Beasts as They Live," by Capt. C. J. Melliss, Ninth Regiment, Bombay Infantry, in the Christmas (December) Scribner's.

A FEAST FOR RATS.

This is given as a good method to dispose of rats when they trouble the poultry: Get some Scotch oatmeal or barley flour and place it at first sparingly in a small heap at some spot frequented by the rats. On examining it in the morning it will be soon seen if any portion has been eaten; if not, let it remain night after night, until you find they have consumed the greater portion. Now place more, but not too lavishly; you will find, in a few nights onwards, the rats greatly increase in number; but never give more food than appears to be well eaten up. In the next place, provide yourself with some newly-made plaster of paris; if not good and recently manufactured, it is altogether valueless for this purpose. Mix, in a perfectly dry state, without any water whatever, in equal proportions, this ingredient with the same kind of meal previously used, but not in a greater quantity than the previous nightly supply. Carefully managed, after such lengthy enticements, rats or mice will consume ravenously their "last meal," for, in a very short time after eating it, the plaster causes intense inflammation of the bowels to set in, with fearful thirst, whilst water instantly produces death, though they will invariably take it if within reach. The great advantage over "poison" of this plan is this—after the death of a mouse or rat, even should cats or other domestic animals eat the defunct, no injury will arise to them, as the plaster has become powerless altogether and they may eat it with impunity. The bait should be nightly laid for at least a fortnight to inspire thorough confidence and secure a full attendance.

THE GRAY HEAD BY THE HEARTH.

A private letter from a lady who is spending a year among the peasants of Tyrol, says:

"The morning after our arrival we were awakened by the sound of a violin and flutes under the window, and hurrying down found the little house adorned as for a feast—garlands over the door and wreathing a high chair which was set in state.

"The table was already covered with gifts brought by the young people whose music we had heard. The whole neighborhood were kinsfolk, and these gifts came from uncles and cousins in every far-off degree. They were very simple, for the donors are poor—knitted gloves, a shawl, basket of flowers, jars of fruit, loaves of bread, but upon all some little message of love was pinned.

"'Is there a bride in the house?' I asked of my landlord.

"'Ach, nein!' he said. 'We do not make such a bother about our own people. It is grandmother's birthday.'

"The grandmother, in her spectacles, white apron and high velvet cap, was heroine all day, sitting in state to receive visits, and dealing out slices from a sweet loaf to each who came. I could not but remember certain grandmothers at home, just as much loved as she, probably, but whose dull, sad lives were never brightened by any such pleasure as this; and I thought we could learn much from these poor mountaineers."—Youth's Companion.

SORDID IN HIS LOVE.—In September, Rev. W. B. Matteson of the Baptist Church at Owosso, Mich., was called upon to marry a couple, the groom being a man of 70 and the bride considerably younger, says the Chicago Times-Herald. At the conclusion of the ceremony the groom handed the minister $20. Several weeks later Mr. Matteson was informed that owing to the excitement of the occasion, the aged bridegroom was somewhat rattled, and had mistaken the $20 for $5, and demanded a rebate of $15. The reverend gentleman sent his check for the required amount to correct the error, but this was not sufficient. It seems in the old man's third venture three months was all that was required to exhaust the glamor of matrimony, and life with him had become once more simply a matter of business. Consequently he demanded that the minister pay him interest on the $15. The request was immediately complied with, and a second check was drawn for the sum of 15 cents, and when the voucher was returned a few days ago the minister caused it to be framed and it now hangs in his study.

Little All Aloney.

Little All Aloney's feet
Pitter patter in the hall,
And his mother runs to meet
And to kiss her toddling sweet
Ere perchance he fall.
He is, oh, so weak and small!
Yet what danger shall he fear
When his mother hovereth near,
And he hears her cheering call,
"All Aloney?"

Little All Aloney's face,
It is all aglow with glee,
As around the romping place
At a terrifying pace
Lungeth, plungeth he!
And that hero seems to be
All unconscious of our cheers,
Only one dear voice he hears
Calling resumingly,
"All Aloney!"

Though his legs bend with their load,
Though his feet they seem so small
That you cannot help forbode
Some disastrous epsode,
In the noisy hall,
Neither threatening bump nor fall
Little All Aloney fears,
But with secret bravado steers
Whether comes that cheery call,
"All Aloney!"

Ah, that in the years to come,
When he shares of sorrow's store,
When his feet are chill and numb,
When his cross is burdensome,
And his heart is sore,
Would that he could hear once more
The gentle voice he used to hear,
Divine with mother love and cheer,
Calling from yonder spirit shore,
"All, all alone!"

A GOVERNMENT RIDER'S STORY.

There will never be another Indian outbreak serious enough to call for the action of a full regiment of soldiers in suppressing it. The extermination of the buffalo was the death-blow to the hostile Indian. Added to that, the building of the railroad lines flooded the West with emigrants, miners, hunters and tourists, and the Indian found himself hedged in by circumstances. The red man is no longer a warrior. He is down, and down pretty low, and it is the beginning of the end. He is doomed to follow the buffalo, and his total extinction will be regretted only by the few philanthropists who argued for him as a theory, and never came in physical contact.

No human being ever came nearer being a fiend than an Apache Indian. The Pawnee, Blackfeet, and Cheyennes were wicked enough, but the Apache had traits of his own—a fiendishness which other tribes might imitate but not equal. He was born crafty and cruel! He never had the slightest feeling of mercy or pity from the cradle to the grave. He was never so much amused as when assisting to torture some living thing. He was never so satisfied as when planning to take life.

A year previous to this time Gen. Custer was ordered West to begin a vigorous campaign against the Indians, the Apaches were in their glory, and they boasted that they could defeat any force of soldiers sent them. I was scouting and mail-carrying in Texas for the Government, and after many close shaves was finally captured by the red imps. It is of this incident I am going to write.

A month before my capture I was out on a scout on the Rio Pecos river, our party numbering eighteen men. We were well mounted and moving quickly from point to point. One day at noon we went into camp in a grove of cottonwoods, and before I had unsaddled the Lieutenant in command informen me that he had lost his revolver from its hostler during the last mile of our ride, and asked me to ride back in search. Instead of riding I returned on foot, and had the luck to find the weapon only about a quarter of a mile away. I then cut across an elbow to reach the grove, and when within a stone's throw came suddenly upon an Indian pony

Well Worth Telling.

A Well-Known Senator Tells a Remarkable Story.

No Possible Doubt as to Its Absolute Truth,

From the High Standing of the Senator.

Higher the Position, More Interesting the Facts.

Our Readers are Eager for Just Such Details.

Senator Frank Plumley of Northfield, Vt., is a man of national reputation. No man today stands more prominently before the people of the state of Vermont than he.

A lawyer by profession, he was elected to the House of Representatives in 1882, is trustee of schools, trustee of Northfield bank, and trustee of Norwich University (a military school under patronage of U. S. Government), has been trustee of the Montpelier Seminary, chairman of the Republican state convention in 1886, delegate-at-large to the Republican national convention in 1888, was United States attorney for Vermont from 1889 to 1894, and is now state senator.

Senator Plumley is well known throughout the United States, having been selected by the national Republican committee as speaker to stump the state of Michigan for Blaine in 1884, and again in 1886 and 1892 he spoke through the West for the Republican presidential candidate.

When he came out of the presidential campaign in '92, owing to overwork he was almost a complete nervous wreck.

To our representative the Senator said:

"In the fall of 1892 I came out of the presidential campaign with my nervous system almost broken.

"Rest and ordinary remedies did not assist me. Some of my personal friends advised me to take a course of Dr. Greene's medicines, which I did with entire success.

"I used Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy for that exhaustion caused by long continued mental work, and think well of it."

We understand that Senator Plumley's cure is radical and complete, and while we congratulate the popular Senator on his recovery, we cannot but add that this is a distinct triumph for that marvelous medicine, Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy, which, owing to the high standing of Senator Plumley, and the fact that he is so widely known, will give Dr. Greene's Nervura a great boom.

The remedy deserves it, for it is in truth a most wonderful curer of disease, a restorative and invigorator which stands at the present day without a rival in making people well; a remedy which is always sure to cure, to give health and strength, to make whoever uses it strong and vigorous.

This most valuable remedy is not a patent medicine and should not be classed as such, for it is the discovery and prescription of one of our leading specialists in nervous and chronic diseases, Dr. Greene, of 34 Temple Place, Boston, Mass. The doctor gives an added value to his great remedy by allowing all who desire to consult him without charge, either in person or through the mail.

in a dry gulch, and at the same instant discovered his owner crouched behind a boulder with his back to me and his face to the grove. I had him under my rifle before he could turn his head. Indeed, my finger was on the trigger when I saw that he was a boy. He had a rifle in his hands, but I called on him to lay it down or I would fire, and after a moment's hesitation he obeyed. Then, as I kept him covered at a distance of only eight feet, I called to the men in the grove, and several of them came hurrying down in response.

I had captured a son of Black Cloud, chief of one of the Apache bands, and the boy was named after his father. He was only fourteen years old, and his presence there exemplified the ruling traits of Apache character. Three hours before he had discovered our party while out hunting with a party of his own. They dared not make an open attack, but the young chief had sent his people away and then cut across the country to the grove, planning that we would halt there. Single-handed and alone he was going to pick off the lieutenant and then make his escape to boast of it. We had splendid horses and were all old campaigners, and the boy would not have one chance in ten to get away. He must have realized it, and yet he was willing to run the risks. He was greatly chagrined and cast down by his capture. We had finished our scout and were on our way back to Fort McKavett, and we determined to carry him as prisoner. When he was informed of this he earnestly begged me to kill him, saying that he could never hold up his head among his people again. Had he been wounded and rendered helpless it would not have been so bad; but to be taken as he was would forever disgrace him. We bound him fast to his pony, secured the animal against a break for liberty and set for the fort.

The boy was sullen and defiant for a time, refusing to answer any questions, but after a while, when I had told him that he would not be harmed, and that his capture under the circumstances redounded to his credit, he thawed out a little. Three hours after his capture we got sight of a single Indian a mile away to our right on a knoll, and we halted young Black Cloud, who informed me that it was one of his tribe who wanted to have a talk with us. Signals were exchanged between the two, and the stranger soon came galloping in. He was one of the hunting party, and had been dodging us for twenty miles to find out if the boy had been captured. He was a fine looking fellow, and as he halted in our midst and saw the ignoble situation of the boy his first thought was to fight for him. I called his attention to the fact that any move of his would result in the death of them both, and then explained how the youth was captured. Knowing the conceit of the tribe I spread it on very thick, alleged that it required our whole force to make the capture, and it was not accomplished then without a hard fight. This falsehood made the boy my friend for life, while it put the other in better humor. I stated that young Black Cloud would be taken to fort and held prisoner until exchanged for some white captive, and gave my word that he would be well treated meanwhile. He sent a message to his father to the affect that he was not afraid, and hoped to be at liberty in a few days, and two hours later we had him safely lodged in the guard house at the fort. His capture was looked upon as a good thing, for we knew that his tribe would gladly exchange two or three white prisoners for him.

Two weeks after the capture of young Black Cloud I was called to the colonel's office one evening, and asked if I thought it possible to get through to Fort Concho with dispatches. The country was then in the possession of the hostiles. The Pecos warriors had come down out of New Mexico to made common cause against the whites, and the Kioways, Cheyennes, Chickasaws, Seminoles and Shawnees were all out in the country to the north and east. The Apaches WOULD HAVE PREFERRED THE MONEY.

There was a look of great happiness on Dimpleton's face as he turned toward his wife and handed her a neat rectangular package, on which her name was carelessly written in pencil.

"Yes, my dear," he continued, as, with an air of mystification, his wife cut the string and examined curiously in turn a bright new pass-book and check-book of a well-known bank, "for some time I was troubled to know just what to get you. Recalling the number of occasions that you have remarked that you would like to feel that you were independent, and knowing also what an excellent thing it is for a woman to acquaint herself with the ordinary methods of doing business, it occured to me that it would be a nice thing to open a bank account for your use. I have therefore deposited $1000 to your credit. Here are your bank-book and your book of blank checks, and you will have only to step around to the bank with me and leave your signature, and the thing will be complete. There, what do you think of that for your Christmas?"

"It's lovely, deary, of course," replied Mrs. Dimpleton, looking at him somewhat vaguely as she absently turned over the leaves of the check-book, "and yet, do you know, I think I would rather have had the money."—Life.

Marvelous Results.

From a letter written by Rev. J. Gunderman, of Dimondale, Mich., we are permitted to make this extract: "I have no hesitation in recommending Dr. King's New Discovery, as the results were almost marvelous in the case of my wife. While I was pastor of the Baptist church at Rivers Junction she was brought down with pneumonia succeeding la grippe. Terrible paroxysms of coughing would last hours with little interruption, and it seemed as if she could not survive them. A friend recommended Dr. King's New Discovery; it was quick in its work and highly satisfactory in results." Trial bottles free of LeGro & Lynde, Palmer; G. L. Keeney, Monson; F. A. Spencer, Ware. Electric Bitters.

Electric Bitters is a medicine suited for any season, but perhaps more generally needed in the spring, when the languid exhausted feeling prevails, when the liver is torpid and sluggish and the need of a tonic and alterative is felt. A prompt use of the medicine has often averted long and perhaps fatal bilious fevers. No medicine will act more surely in counteracting and freeing the system from the malarial poison. Headache, indigestion, consumption, dizziness yield to Electric Bitters. Only fifty cents per bottle of LeGro & Lynde, Palmer; G. L. Keeney, Monson; F. A. Spencer, Ware.

Comfort One Another.

Comfort one another,
For the way is growing dreary,
And the feet are often weary,
And the heart is very sad.
There is heavy burden-bearing
When we think that none are caring,
And we half forget that ever we were glad.

Comfort one another,
With the hand-clasp close and tender,
With the sweetness love can render
And with looks of friendly eyes.
Do not wait with grace unspoken,
While life's daily bread is broken—
Gentle speech is oft like manna from the skies.

Comfort one another.
These are words of music ringing
Down the ages, sweet as singing
Of the happy choirs above.
Ransomed saint, and mighty angel,
Lift the grand, deep-voiced evangel
Where forever they are praising the eternal Love.

Comfort one another—
By the hope of Him who sought us
In our peril—He who bought us,
Paying with His most precious blood.
By the faith that will not alter,
Trusting strength that will not falter,
Leaning on the One divinely good.

Comfort one another.
Let the grave gloom lie beyond you,
While the Spirit's words remind you
Of the home beyond the tomb.
Where no more is pain or parting,
Fever's flush to tear-drop starting,
But the presence of the Lord, and for all His people room.

THE CAPTAIN'S CHARGE.

Extract from District Orders.
PIETERMARITZBURG, May 10, 1879.

"Captain Ellicott, Ninety-fourth regiment, will report himself without delay to Major Manley, chief paymaster, in order to receive instructions that will be conveyed to him by that officer."

In obedience to the foregoing, I presented myself at the head office of the army pay department, and requested to be shown to Major Manley's room.

"Good morning, sir," I said on being admitted. "I am directed to report myself to you."

"Yes, Ellicott," answered the ever-cheery chief, who had always kindly words of advice and encouragement to offer those who served under his orders, "I am about to detail you to a difficult and somewhat dangerous duty. Money must be conveyed to Newcastle for the payment of supplies, as the Boers refused to receive our paper; and even if the drafts were accepted, there is not sufficient specie in the small country-banks to meet all the demands that would be made upon them. So I want to send you up with fifty thousand pounds in gold to be handed over to Mr. Martin, now in commissariat charge at Newcastle, who will account to me direct for all payments made."

"Am I not to have the usual escort detailed in the treasury instructions?" I asked.

"No; there's the pinch. Our losses were so great at Isandhlwana that we have not a single man to spare. All clerks and employed men must take their turn of duty. Besides, I wish to avoid an escort, as it would only have the effect of unnecessarily advertising the matter. In the present state of the country, with shoals of doubtful characters about, this would be injudicious and almost invite attack. So the general has fallen in with my suggestions, as to the matter of conveyance, I taking the responsibility of its safe delivery. Now listen. And he proceeded to unfold his plan.

The position appeared to be this: After our losses on the 22d of January, and while waiting for reinforcements, there were barely enough men to enable us to hold our own in case of a descent upon the colony by Cetewayo. Pietermaritzburg had been put in the state of defence by erecting loopholed barricades in the streets. The courthouse was fortified and laagers formed at various strategic points, to which all the inhabitants were to repair upon a given signal—the firing of three guns in quick succession from Fort Napier. All the outlying posts and towns were also strongly fortified. This prohibited the withdrawal of any men employed in the duties of defence.

Ordinarily a guard of one officer and twenty-five men is provided for the escort of treasure; but, as has been explained, the present circumstances were unfavorable to this course, and prompt payment for supplies being imperative, the following was decided on.

The money was to be packed in ammunition boxes, with the usual descriptive label of contents remaining on them. Then it was to be loaded in an ordinary Cape cart (a marvel of lightness and strength) and placed under charge of an officer, who, he was pleased to say, should be a man of courage and resource; passing it on to the front, as was frequently done at the time, as ammunition. There was a great scarcity of stores of all kinds after our losses at Isandhlwana, where immense quantites of supplies had to be abandoned.

"Now," he went on to say, "the greatest risk you will run is from the swarm of men who, under the guise of somebody's 'Horse,' or somebody else's 'Rangers,' et hoc genus omne, are spread all over the country at the present time. I don't allude to the gallant men under tried leaders who have done such good and loyal service, but to those smaller bands under unknown men, to which are attracted the usual lawless spirits that always crop up under pressure of times like the present. Should you come across any of these, they would make nothing of taking your life if they got an inkling of what you have in charge."

This was true enough.

"Now, Captain Ellicott, do you feel equal to the risk?" continued Major Manley. My spirits rose at the prospect. The task was no doubt a difficult one, but I reflected that this was a chance that might never come in my way again, and I felt a not unpardonable pride in the hope of obtaining a little distinction should I successfully carry out the duty now entrusted to me.

"I am your man, Major," I replied. "When am I to start?"

"Good," he said, grasping my hand. "Your ready acceptance of what, to be plain with you, is a hazardous undertaking, shall not go unrepresented in the proper quarter."

In order to throw the loafer element off the scent, a paragraph was inserted in The Natal Witness, stating that Captain Ellicott, of the Ninety-fourth regiment, was in order to join the headquarters of his corps, and take with him a supply of reserve amunition, the transport department being directed to provide conveyance.

The date of leaving was given as some days after that intended for my actual departure; consequently I should be well on the way before it was known that I had started.

Two days after the interview mentioned above, the cart containing my valuable consignment wound slowly upward along ten miles of steep hill leading to Howick. The Hottentot driver grumbled now and then at the weight of the ammunition, saying it ought to be sent on an ox-wagon, instead of a mule-cart. He was afraid the springs would not hold out. I soothed him, however, with an occasional draught of Boer brandy, with which I had provided myself—that fiery liquid so highly prized by his class, upon whose head it appeared not to make the slightest impression. After a long and wearysome crawl upward, we reached at length the comparatively level road which terminated at the hotel.

I was disagreeably surprised on arrival to find here a body of volunteers, about forty in number; composed principally, as it appeared to me, of that dubious class known as the "canteen loafer," a product peculiar to some parts of South Africa. They were under the leadership of a smooth-tongued individual named Osierton, whom I had frequently met at Pietermaritzburg, and who was said to be very well connected—a reckless gambler, ready to bet on anything or everything, having the additional reputation of being an utterly unscrupulous scoundrel.

His second in command was a drunken, quarrelsome ruffian named Mondrum, who had been forbidden the entree to any decent hotel where he was known, and was strongly suspected of being concerned in a robbery committed at a farmhouse on the Mooi river some months previously. His knowledge of the Zulu language (he having lived among the natives for several years)! was the recommendation for the post he held.

On my requesting Mrs. Padley, the landlady, to oblige me with a separate room in which to deposit the ammunition, she became alarmed and refused to allow it to enter the house.

"No, sir," she said. "I have had trouble enough already with these men. They have been hanging about the place for nearly a week, and I am afraid if I admit your ammunition, they will set fire to something and blow us all to pieces. It had better remain outside."

This was an unexpected rebuff, and all I could urge would not make her alter her decision. So with many misgivings I piled the boxes in front of a little turret room at the end of the veranda that had been allotted to me as a sleeping place.

This band of volunteers, or what many persons would be inclined to style bandits, kept up their revels to a late hour, and than dropped off, one by one, to seek some place inside or outside the house to sleep away the effects of their orgie.

I tried to ascertain from Osierton where he was bound to, and when he intended to march, being desirous of giving him and his men a wide berth. He smiled furtively and replied in his smooth, almost musical voice: "Really, Captain, I am not quite sure yet. I was detailed by General Clifford to proceed to Harrismith; but I understand that that has now been changed, and I am waiting here for orders. Where might you be going?"

I thought it well to conceal my destination, and said:

"Oh! I'm for the Bushman's river, at Weston."

"The Bushman's river? Why, the mounted police are there! They have plenty of ammunition, I know. Major Dartnell, their commandant, told me so."

"Yes, of course," I replied. "But this that I have is intended for distribution to any detached post that may be in need of it; and Weston is centrally situated."

This conversation took place in the veranda outside my room, in the vicinity of the boxes. Mondrum, coming out of the hotel at the moment with a pipe in his mouth, reeled up to where he heard voices.

"What's up?" he demanded. "Who says we're to move on? Devilish unlikely, with comfortable quarters and five bob a day for doing nothing. Time enough to do the fighting when it comes.

"I vote for staying here and holding the laager." A laager adjacent to, and partly joining the hotel, and just been completed by the neighboring farmers, as a place of retreat should an attack be made. "What do you say, commandant?" he inquired, addressing Osierton, and seating himself on the boxes.

"Don't smoke over the ammunition," I said. "One doesn't know how a spark might reach it."

"Let it go off, then," he answered with an ugly word, kicking at the pile and dislodging one of the boxes, which fell to the ground.

"Hullo!" he cried, "it jingles like coin. Let us lift it up again."

This random shot made me hold my breath for a moment. Then I hurriedly stepped forward and replaced it.

"It wouldn't be a bad idea," said Osierton, to store this in the laager, and there we would have it snug, in case of a visit from Dabulamanzi. I hear he was seen at Veldtman's Drift yesterday."

"I couldn't allow it to leave my charge," I returned, "until it is handed over to the officer commanding at Weston. Otherwise I should get into trouble."

"Oh, we'll relieve you of that," he cried. "This is war time, and circumstances alter cases."

The position was getting a little embarrassing, so it struck me I had better fall in with his humor, and pretended to think it might be as well to do as he suggested, merely observing that they would not find it of much use, as the cartridges were for Martini-Henrys, and their arms seemed to be Sniders.

"Oh, let it go! What's the good of keeping it here?" said Mondrum. "It will only be in the way. We have plenty for our fellows. Have you anything to drink?" he inquired, turning to me.

"Yes. I have a couple of bottles of whisky in the cart, and shall be glad if you will join me in a glass." This offer was met with noisy approval; and, seating ourselves on the step of the hotel, we proceeded to discuss the liquor. After a while I pretended to fall asleep, and they, when both bottles had been finished, were soon snoring beside me.

I rose cautiously on ascertaining that all around were deep in slumber, and went toward my room, very anxious as regarding the action I should take.

I may here mention that the money was made up at the bank in rouleaus of twenty sovereigns each, and packed tightly in the boxes. But after the last had been filled there remained over and above about eighty sovereigns; to few too fill another box, and too bulky to fit in, made up in the same manner as the others. So they were distributed loosely over the top of the last box and some sheets of paper pressed heavily down upon them to prevent any rolling about. To this circumstance my thoughts reverted when Mondrum spoke of the "jingle of coin;" for, undoubtedly, the same impression had been conveyed to my own mind when the box fell. It would be singularly unfortunate if this should be the identical box in which the loose money had been placed.

I also began to have doubts of the crafty commandant. I had noticed him eyeing me once or twice, and I might unknown to myself, have shown more anxiety than the occasion seemed to warrant.

I was in much perplexity as to what course I should pursue. I could do nothing openly against the desperadoes that surrounded me; and if any idea dawned upon them of the real nature of my charge, nothing could save me. But I was determined not to resign it without a struggle.

Several plans occurred to my mind. I thought of quickly harnessing the mules and driving back to Pietermaritzburg, taking my chances of pursuit, and waiting a more favorable opportunity. But this idea, on reflection, I abandoned, as it would be impossible to get away unobserved, and my returning without any obvious reasons would give rise to comment.

I never closed my eyes during the night, and just as the gray light of dawn began to appear, I got up and looked around. Osierton and Mondrum were still lying where I had left them, and a number of others were scattered about the stoop.

At this moment I heard a quiet step pass the end of the house near the laager, and was a little startled to see the dark face of an Italian named Marco Dinelli, who had been employed as a temporary clerk in the office of the chief paymaster. From that post he had been quietly dismissed on account of a doubtful transaction in reference to a money order sent to a soldier who was a patient in the hospital, which order was cashed by Danelli, after the man's death.

The deceased soldier's signature was suspected of being a forgery. The Italian averred, however, that he had advanced the amount of the order to the man.

The ex-clerk knew a good deal about the pay office, and the object of my journey might by some means have leaked out; so I was not without apprehension on this score.

He advanced and saluted me respectfully.

"Well, Dinelli," I said, "what are you doing here?"

"I am on my way to the front, sir," he replied. "Captain Stepstone told me some time ago, if ever I wanted employment, he would appoint me to his own troop of Natal Carbineers; and being anxious to see a little service I thought I would remind him of his offer."

"How did you get here?' I asked.

"I came up by the post-cart on Thursday," he replied, "and was hoping some kind person would give me a lift. You don't happen to have any room, sir?"

"No," I said, "my mules have as much as they can carry already."

He glanced, I thought, curiously at the boxes, and saluting again, wished me good-morning, and went toward the front of the hotel.

By this time the people of the house began to stir, and preparations for breakfast were soon in full swing.

On the appearance of this meal I joined the motley group in the common room, for there is no distinction in a frontier hotel in South Africa; master and mistress and guests of every degree sitting down together.

I observed Dinelli and Osierton in conversation during the morning, and this did not tend to allay my fears. So I delayed proceeding onward for the present, and continued my stay at Howick, until I had time to think the matter out.

Toward mid-day I observed a mule-cart bowling along the road from the direction of Pietermaritzburg. On reaching the hotel it pulled up close to where I was standing, and there stepped out an officer in uniform, whom I recognized as Dr. Mills, of the army medical department.

We had met frequently at headquarters, and knowing him to be a man of some judgment and decision of character, I determined to make a confidant of him.

Having unharnessed and partaken of refreshments, he expressed a wish to see Umgani Falls, a magnificent cascade in the immediate neighborhood, falling from a height of over three hundred feet. The roar of its waters could be heard from where we were standing.

I hailed this opportunity of making my communication, and volunteered to accompany him.

When well out of earshot, I explained all the circumstances of my position, and the doubts I entertained of Dinelli. He listened attentively.

"And now what do you suggest?" he asked, after I had ended.

My idea was this: He, being on his way to Helpmakaar with a supply of medical comforts for the troops, was to permit me to exchange loads with him, allowing me to transfer the contents of his vehicle to mine, while I placed the specie in his. He then was to drive on to Currie's post and Colenso to Ladysmith, where the money could be placed in charge of the resident magistrate until my arrival.

"But how about yourself?" he asked. "If, as you seem to think, they have a suspicion of what you carry, you will be murdered to a certainty. I never saw a more cut-throat looking set of scoundrels in my life than those worthies of Osierton's horse. Besides, how can the exchange be effected without exciting suspicion?"

"I have thought of that," I returned. "After breakfast I had a private interview with Mrs. Padley, and upon my pressing invitation obtained her consent to have the boxes removed to a room at the back of the premises. A door from thence leads into the new laagar, as a place of exit should the hotel be attacked and become untenable. From that room I think I should be able after nightfall to make the necessary transfer unobserved, you causing your conveyance to be taken to the back of the house. I heard them say that Mr. Shore, of the telegraph department, was expected in to-night with some workmen, and as he is a jovial sort of fellow, always spending his money pretty freely, there will, no doubt, be a carouse. As regards myself," I added, "they will feel secure, for I have announced my intention of not starting until late to-morrow morning, two of my mules being slightly lame. This luckily happens to be the case. Should this come off all right, I will take my departure, after allowing you a good start, and, if I reach Currie's post unmolested, will remain there for the night; and on the following morning endeavor to reach Ladysmith by Bavian's Port and the old road."

"I think the plan a risky one for you, whichever way you look at it," he observed; but you may rely on my coöperation."

I thanked him heartily, and remarked that his own share was not free from danger; at which he laughed.

After viewing the falls we returned to the hotel.

The advent of Mr. Shore led, as was anticipated, to a jollification, and I joined in with apparent zest, slipping away every now and then to remove a package from the doctor's cart, replacing it by one of the boxes, until the exchange had been fully completed.

The next morning was an anxious one to me.

Dr. Mills, at an early hour, harnessed in a leisurely manner, stood chatting with me for a few moments on indifferent subjects within hearing of the people about, and then drove away.

I gave a sigh of relief as I saw the mules turn the corner that shut out the view of the house, and disappear in the scrub-lined road below.

Turning back to the hotel, I encountered the Italian, in company with Osierton and Mondrum. "Well, captain," said the latter, "when do you start? Can we help you to load the ammunition?"

"Thank you," I said coolly; "it is done already. I didn't like to trust to chance, as accidents often happen."

"Yes; it might go off, you know," said Osierton jeeringly; and they all three laughed.

I was now convinced that Dinelli had by some means become acquainted with the fact of the despatch of the gold; so I determined to delay my departure as long as possible, in order to enable Dr. Mills to reach Currie's post in sufficient time to halt, rest his mules, and again resume his journey; by which time the safety of the consignment would be secure.

I answered the trio with a jest, and my spirits rose at the thought of having out-witted the scoundrels.

I noticed that they did not communicate with any other members of the band, so I concluded that, if they had any enterprise in hand, they meant to keep it to themselves.

When the time had arrived that I had decided to start, I ordered the driver to harness, having previously hired two fresh mules from a farmer in the neighborhood. When all was ready, I drove away.

A number of men were standing about, but I did not observe Dinelli or his two new friends.

Carefully examining my revolver, which was loaded in all six chambers, I brought it conveniently to my hand and prepared for whatever might happen.

There was only one part of the road where I could be attacked at a disadvantage, and this was situated about half-way between the Falls and Currie's post, at a bend around a narrow shoulder of rock. Before coming in sight of this place I pulled up a few moments, and addressing the driver, said:

"Now, my man, I want you, on reaching Botha's Neck, to drive your hardest round the bend, and tear at full speed down the hill into the open. I fear I am going to be attacked, but nothing must stop you. There is a sovereign, and if we reach Currie's post, I will give you another. But should you hesitate for a moment—see this"—and I pointed to my revolver.

"Hi!" he yelled, as he caught the coin I threw to him. Then flourishing his huge whip and calling the animals by their names he urged them on in the usual Hottentot fashion.

I had determined to push boldly on, concluding that Dr. Mills would by this time have reached his destination; for my life would certainly pay the forfeit should they discover the ruse I had practised.

On reaching the point I had indicated, the driver rose in his seat and brought his whip down with a crack like a pistol-shot, taking the critical turn at a break-neck pace. But as we rounded the curve there arose three figures from behind one of the larger recks, with rifles pointed and shouting to us to stop.

"Drive on!" I cried. "Drive on!"

Seeing that we disregarded their menacing demand, they delivered a volley, one shot striking the driver and tumbling him into the road, the wheels passing over him.

I gathered up the reins as best I could, shouting and encouraging the mules to keep up the pace, and with such success that I was enabled to reach the incline that led to the open country.

Having by this time reloaded, they sent in a second volley, one shot striking me in the cheek, while another disabled two of the leading mules. Their brought me to a standstill, and the three men rushed forward. I fired at the foremost, bringing him down, and the other two, swearing fearful oaths, made toward me. I recognized them as Osierton and Mondrum. The man I had hit was Dinelli.

I slipped out on the off-side, where I was partially covered by the cart.

"Stand back," I said, "or I'll fire. What do you want?"

"Hand over the money," replied Osierton, with an oath.

"What money?" I asked. "There is no money here."

"Don't parley with us," said the other ruffian, "or I'll put a bullet through you in no time."

"I tell you there is no money here," I repeated; "nothing but medical stores. Look for yourselves."

"Stand out of the way, then," said Osierton.

I stood aside, revolver in hand, while the blood streamed down my face and neck. They both dived into the cart.

At this instant I cast my eyes down the road, and saw a small party of mounted men riding toward us. I sprang to the crest of the hill, and waved my hat frantically to them. The next moment I heard a report and felt a burning sensation at the side of my head; then dropping to the ground, lost all consciousness.

When I recovered I found myself in bed at Currie's post, suffering from a gunshot wound that had nearly made an end to me; missing by almost a hair's breadth, but giving me a nasty knock on the head, and then carrying away a portion of my left ear.

The horsemen I had seen were Commissary-General Lanfree and three officers of his department on their way from the front. They at once observed my signal, rode rapidly up the hill, where they found me insensible, the driver severely wounded in the neck and two ribs broken by the wheels having passed over him.

Dinelli was dead. The other two rode off, and escaped to the Orange Free state, taking part against us subsequently in the Transvaal war; but after that nothing further was ever learned regarding them.

The money was conveyed safely by Dr. Mills to Ladysmith and deposited with the resident magistrate, from whose custody it was afterward transferred to its proper destination; the worthy doctor receiving back his supply of medical appliances.

I was complimented by the general for what he was pleased to term the courage and resolution I had displayed; and on the report reaching home I was promoted, and received a decoration in recognition of the service I had rendered.—Lieutenant-Colonel Mahoney, C. M. G., in the Argosy.

The Journal.

FRIDAY EVENING, JANUARY 31, 1896.

The town of Amherst is to have a free postal delivery after April 1st.

Mrs. Betsey Holton Moody, 91, mother of Evangelist Dwight Moody, died last Sunday at her home in Northfield.

The United States' ambassador at Berlin, Theodore Runyon, died suddenly of heart disease at that place early Monday morning.

NOTWITHSTANDING the protestations of the Sultan of Turkey that he has given orders that the massacres of the Armenians shall cease, it appears to be a simple question with the Armenian of recant or die, or recant and die.

THERE can be no question about the benefits to be derived by Western Massachusetts manufacturers if the Connecticut river can be made navigable to Holyoke, and it is sincerely hoped that those who are making a push with that end in view will be successful in their efforts, and that in the near future.

A JUMP of $9 a share in the Boston and Albany railroad stock this week has given rise to all sorts of rumors about that road's being absorbed by the New York, New Haven and Hartford. The New York Central is also credited with a possible enviousness in this direction, and while nothing is known at present, the knowing ones say they would not be surprised to "hear suthin' drap" at any moment.

MUCH regret is felt in all places where the results of their work is known and their influence is felt that Commander Ballington Booth and wife of the Salvation Army in America have been ordered to return to England, and an immense mass meeting will be held in New York next Monday to protest to General Booth against his order. Chauncey Depew will preside at the meeting, and some of New York's most prominent men will speak.

Two bills regarding Sunday liquor selling in New York are before the Legislature of that state. One provides for the opening of saloons between the hours of 1 and 10 p. m., which means practically open selling; the other, which has the approval of Dr. Parkhurst, permits side-door opening and the sale of liquor to be drunk with meals on the premises, or to be carried off the premises and drunk elsewhere, between 12 and 2, and 6 and 8 p. m.

THE village improvement committee of the Palmer Business and Social Club has the power to do a good work for the village and the town by formulating a set of town by-laws, and after getting them adopted at the annual meeting next March, looking after their enforcement. Many abuses exist which should not be tolerated, the correction of which would add to the beauty of the town and the general well-being of the community at large.

IT IS reported that the British government is desirous of again resuming diplomatic relations with Venezuela with a view to a settlement of the boundary dispute, but that Venezuela must make the first advance. The settlement is to be by arbitration, but if the decision is that England does not own all the territory claimed, another tribunal is to settle upon the dividing line. So it is possible that the United States Venezuelan commission may find itself out of a job.

BOTH branches of the United States government have passed resolutions urging the allied Powers of Europe to take steps to suppress Mohammedan fanaticism and protect the Christian inhabitants of Turkey. One of the resolutions was that the government "will support the President in the most vigorous action he may take for the protection and security of American citizens in Turkey, and to obtain redress for injuries committed on the persons or property of such citizens."

THE Legislative committee hearings regarding biennial elections have brought out no inconsiderable array of talent on both sides, and some forceful arguments have been made for and against. There can be no doubt however but that the voters ought to have the opportunity of expressing their preferences in the matter, and if this is done Massachusetts would probably fall into line with the majority of other states regarding the matter, and elect her officers once in two years.

REPORTS from the government agents go to show that the Louisiana lottery dies hard When driven out of that state it secured a standing in Honduras, but is now said to have American headquarters at Tampa, Fla., where the whole thing is managed, the tickets printed and sent out and drawings made, although there seems to be evidence that the drawings are really few in number, a prize or two being now and then announced, while the managers pocket the money which poor fools send for tickets.

THAT is a decided compliment to Palmer's overseers of the poor and the warden of its town farm, which was paid them by a Boston gentleman who through a misunderstanding was last week compelled to spend a day and night at that institution, the story of which is told in our news columns. His statement that he preferred the quarters at the Palmer town farm to those he had left at a Boston hospital speaks volumes for the manner in which the local institution is conducted, and the care and attention which its unfortunate inmates receive.

AFTER a successful contest with the billows of the Atlantic the steamer St. Paul ran aground opposite Long Branch last Saturday morning in the fog, while trying to "pick up" the lightship which marks the Sandy Hook bar; she still sticks there, and is likely to for some time to come, as the bottom is of gradually sloping sand, and the vessel's nose is deep in it. The passengers were all safely removed. It is stated that the vessel was racing with the Campania, of another line, and was running at full speed when she struck, although the officers knew that they were somewhere in the vicinity of the Sandy Hook bar. A quick passage across is of course desirable, but no captain has a right to imperil the lives of his passengers for the sake of beating another boat by a minute or two, and if the boat was racing the officer in command should be severely disciplined.

A REVIVAL of the whipping post for the punishment of certain crimes is advocated in some states, and there would seem to be cases in Massachusetts where this method of correction might be adopted to good advantage. Our local columns tell the story of a man who can work and has the work offered, but who won't. There are children in the family and the town is obliged to support them. The father can be sent up for three months for neglecting to support his family, and at the end of that time if he fails to provide for them can be sent up for three more, and so on indefinitely. The children can be taken in charge by the state as "neglected," and then the father can be sent up for a longer term as an "indolent and idle person." In either event the support of the family comes on the public; the one who is responsible for their being and who should provide for them can, by simply refusing, get rid of the matter and have an easy time in the state's correctional institutions. Might not some other than the present method of dealing with such cases be an improvement?

PALMER NEWS.

HOSPITAL OFFICIALS TO BLAME.

Why Marshall L. Hitchcock, an Old Resident of Palmer, was Sent to the Town Farm Last Week.

Many readers of the JOURNAL last week wondered why it was that Marshal L. Hitchcock, an old resident of the town, had been given into the care of the overseers of the poor, when he had a son in Boston who is able to care for him. The reason was that someone in the City Hospital at Boston blundered, and the old man was sent to Palmer on the very day that his son called to take him to his home. Mr. Hitchcock, who is 82, fell on the ice on Tremont street in Boston Tuesday, January 14, breaking his left shoulder and arm. His son, H. W. Hitchcock, who is in business at 29 Dover street, sent him to the hospital to have the fracture set; he wished to take him home the same day, but the physician would not allow it. After several days it was stated that the patient would be discharged on the 21st at 2 p. m. About 1 30 the son called and was much surprised to find his father gone. He says regarding the matter:

"As soon as the ambulance took my father to the hospital I followed him and stating my business at the office, I was informed that my father was in the accident department and was instructed where to go. I went to the supervisor and he referred me to the doctor in attendance upon my father. When he was at liberty I asked him if I could take my father home that night. He said that I had better let him remain there two or three days until he got over the effects of the ether. Thursday I visited him again, that being one of the visiting days. I did not see the doctor, but he told my father he had better stay a few days longer. Saturday I again visited him and saw the doctor, and asked when I could remove him to my home. He asked if I had a place where he could be taken care of and made comfortable. I told him that I had and furthermore told him that I would pay the expenses, and he told me that I could take him Monday or Tuesday. Monday, when I visited him, another doctor had charge of him, and, when I told him what the former doctor had said, he said it was all right and to come at 2 p. m. sharp. On my arrival at the office Tuesday I told the clerk that I wished to see M. L. Hitchcock, when he informed me the patient had been discharged and taken away early that morning. When I told him I was the one who was to take him away and thought he must be mistaken, he referred me to the superintendent's office. On inquiry at the superintendent's office I was informed that he was taken to 29 Dover street early that morning. On my contradiction of this statement he turned to a book where he found that my father had been taken away by the overseers of the poor of Palmer. On making the statement to the assistant superintendent of my conversation with the doctors, who from their conversation led me to suppose that they had full authority to act as they did, he surprised me by saying that they had nothing to do in such matters, and that I should have notified him. On my arrival home I sent a representative to make further inquiries at the hospital. His report is as follows:

"'When I arrived at the hospital I had hard work to see the superintendent. When at last I did gain audience with him he gave me to understand he knew nothing about the case, only that such a patient was there and had been discharged. When I told him the facts he said the son should have reported to him. When I told him that the doctors took the authority upon themselves to act as they did he said they should have referred to him. When I suggested that they had neglected to do their duty in that case he could not see it in that light. When I asked him how they had the authority to send him to the poor farm he referred me to the settlement clerk. I was permitted to see the clerk, who could not say what the old gentlemen had told him, and said there was no way of finding out. He supposed he asked him the same as he did all of such cases, the name, age, place of birth, last residence, etc., and if he could pay for the attendance, and on his saying he was not able to pay himself, without further investigation he left him to the mercies of the overseers of the poor. On further inquiries he stated that was all he knew about the case, as each one had a certain part to perform and knew nothing out of his own line, and no record was kept of such details.'"

The superintendent of the hospital said: "I am very sorry this mistake has occurred, and I sympathize deeply with Mr. Hitchcock and his family. The blame rests on the house doctor, who should have reported at my department the proposition made by the son to pay for his father's treatment."

In regard to the matter as far as the local board of overseers of the poor are concerned, the chairman, Mr. Merriam, says that he received notice from the overseers of the poor in Boston that Mr. Hitchcock was in the hospital in that city on expense to the town of Palmer, and that the Palmer overseers were requested to remove him or provide for his support. Mr. Merriam telephoned to the hospital, and finding that the patient was able to be moved sent Sheriff Studley after him. He arrived in Palmer on the 8 02 a. m. train, and was met at the station by Mr. Merriam and the town physician, Dr. Hendee, being taken in a carriage to the town farm.

The son said, regarding the matter: "I have nothing but praise to express for the manner in which the overseers of the poor and the warden of Palmer treated the old gentleman," and the patient stated, while waiting for the train to take him back to Boston, that if he was obliged to be in a hospital, he preferred his quarters at the Palmer town farm to those in the hospital at Boston, remarking that the accommodations here were fine, and as good as anyone could wish."

ROGERS-OSGOOD HAT CO'S. AFFAIRS.

Condition of the Concern.--Creditors Offered 10 Cents on the Dollar.

The stockholders of the Rogers-Osgood Hat Co. held a meeting last Friday afternoon to consider the affairs of the concern, and appointed a committee consisting of G. M. Atkins, C. F. Grosvenor and W. E. McDonald to investigate matters and report on Tuesday of this week. At that time the committee reported the liabilities of the company as about $63,000, including capital stock. The value of the assets, taken at what the property would probably bring under forced sale, was set at $18,000, although this figure would be considerably increased if the concern could go on with its business. An offer of 10 per cent for the creditors was suggested, the principal one being the firm of Connett, Reed & Co. of New York. They had a representative present, who stated that his firm would accept the offer of 10 cents provided they could continue to handle the product of the factory. The president was authorized to make the creditors an offer of 10 cents on a dollar, and if this had been accepted the company expected to resume business.

J. A. Rogers went to New York Tuesday night to see if some arrangement could be made with the creditors for the compromise, but was unsuccessful, and a petition in insolvency was filed this afternoon.

Some of the stockholders were somewhat critically inclined, and wanted to know what had become of the $5000 which the citizens of Palmer subscribed to get the company here from Barre three years ago, claiming that they supposed the money had been subscribed for the purchase of the building in which the business has been conducted, which in the event of the enterprise proving unsuccessful would be the property of those subscribing. But this was shown to be erroneous, the subscriptions being for stock in the corporation which was formed, and the money going into the treasury of the company.

The plant has not been run to its full capacity, the works being capable of turning out about twice the number of hats which have been finished, and the managers claim that their present embarrassment is due to the failure of their New York agents to furnish them with orders enough to run at a profit.

Won't Work While the Town Will Support Him.

An application was made one day recently to the overseers of the poor by a woman for aid, her two children, she said, having nothing to eat. Investigation proved the truth of her story, and she was given assistance. She stated that her husband could get no work, and so could not support the family. She was told that if he would come to the overseers he could have all the work he wanted,—that they had two jobs on hand, and he could have work at either. He has not yet presented himself for work, and it is evident that he does not care to labor as long as he can be supported at the expense of the town. This same man applied to one of the local physicians on Christmas day for a prescription for a pint of whisky, saying that his wife had broken her leg, and that Dr. Sweet, who had been called to set it, had ordered the whisky, but because of being obliged to take a train had not had time to write the prescription. This seemed a plausible story, and the fellow was given the prescription. He presented it at a drug store and asked for a pint of gin, but the druggist declined to give it to him, as the prescription specified whisky; he then wanted a quart instead of a pint, but again the druggist refused, and he had to content himself with what the prescription called for. He paid for it with a $5 bill. As he left the drug store he remarked to a companion, with a wink: "I fooled 'em pretty slick that time." His remark was overheard, and the matter investigated, when the above facts came out. And the town must support this family; as there are children in it they cannot be denied food, even if the father has an opportunity to work and will not.

C. W. Robinson Retires From the Grocery Firm of Robinson & Taylor.

E. B. Taylor has bought of C. W. Robinson the latter's interest in the grocery store of Robinson & Taylor, and will take possession next week. Mr. Robinson retires from the firm solely on account of ill health, his physician having informed him that he must give up business.

Mr. Taylor came to Palmer seven years ago this spring as distributor in this section of the Fleischmann compressed yeast. He continued in this business about two years, and then purchased an interest in the grocery business conducted by C. W. Robinson. The firm was doing well when, two years ago last Tuesday, it was burned out in the opera house block fire. The next day Robinson & Taylor bought out Thompson & Bannister on Central street, and conducted their business at that stand until the present quarters were fitted up for them. About a year ago the firm decided to do away with bookkeeping and do a cash business. Many of the older merchants looked upon the scheme as one unlikely to succeed, and thought that large numbers of customers would drop off if they could not get trusted. Messrs. Robinson & Taylor concluded however that if they didn't have the money for the goods they would at least have the goods. Many were the guesses as to the length of time before the firm would get sick of the arrangement, but a year has passed and the experience has shown that a return to the old credit system is not desirable.

Mr. Taylor has, by his genial ways, made many friends who will wish him much success in his new venture.

Griggs of Ivoryton, Ct., a soprano new to Palmer people, but who comes with the highest of recommendations. The programme will be:

The committee will endeavor to get options on certain building sites in town, so as to be in readiness with something to offer manufacturers who might possibly desire to locate here.

H. A. Northrop has filled the Brainerd ice house, on the road to Monson, and also his old ice house on Park street. The warm weather of last Saturday sent a hot chill down Mr. Northrop's back, and he hustled the cakes into his Park street house until a late hour that night at the rate of about 30 a minute. Fortunately the weather has turned cold again, and he will have his new house on the road to Thorndike filled soon. This will be used for domestic purposes.

Miss Brigham, who has recently entered the lecture field as an experiment, seems to have attained popular favor at once. She appeared before a Hartford audience on Monday, and the Times of the next morning contained this notice: "Miss Linda Hawley Brigham gave a most acceptable entertainment to the German Literary Societies on Monday evening. The programme, which was pleasantly divided between classics and popular works of the best authors, was received with favor. After the reading Miss Brigham was given an informal reception, and refreshments were served."

Concerning the Canadian Jubilee Singers, who are to be at the Opera House on Monday evening, Feb. 10th, Rev. Joseph Parker, D. D., of London, Eng., says, "I take great pleasure in testifying my sense of the great ability of the Canadian Jubilee Singers;" and Rev. Morgan Wood of Detroit said, after he had heard them for three successive evenings, "They stir the soul, appeal to the intellect, and in fact strike up sympathy with man's entire nature." Remember that tickets are on sale for this concert at Allen's drug store at prices to suit everyone. Secure your ticket early and get a good seat.

An employe of the Sanborn-Ferris Map Co. of New York has been in town through the week making a new map of the insurance risks. The map is one which is made for the exclusive use of insurance agents, and shows the location of every building in town, the village being divided into sections and the risks in each section numbered, so that an insurance company, by reference to the section and number given by the local agent when a policy is written, can at once locate the property which is insured. The survey includes no raising of rates, as some have supposed, but is merely to correct the previously existing maps.

Many comments have been made on the letter signed "Freedom," which was published in last week's JOURNAL. One reader suggests, however, that perhaps the opinion of the majority of the citizens is best expressed by the following extract from a private letter, sent him by a former prominent citizen of the town who is well acquainted with its public school matters: "A great mind must have been the originator of the article signed by 'Freedom' in last week's JOURNAL. If not for the sad havoc which it would cause the schools of Palmer, such men and his followers ought to have the punishment of having just such schools as would be in Palmer were it not for the very men whom he condemns."

Appearances are sometimes deceitful. A local merchant in whose store certain residents had been in the habit of gathering frequently to chat with the proprietor and among themselves, suddenly found a few days ago that his trade in some quarters was dropping off. On inquiry as to the cause thereof he was very much astonished to find that it was because he was accredited with being a member of the A. P. A. His frequent visitors were sympathizers with or members of that order, and it was supposed from their frequent appearances at his store that he was not unfriendly to their sentiments. He strenuously denies that he is in any way connected with that or any other secret order. And the above simply shows that a man's supposed friends may not always be his best friends.

Rev. Father Hart, at both masses last Sunday, referred briefly and in very temperate language to the unchristian efforts made by a few misled zealots to stir up religious strife in a community hitherto remarkably free from such afflictions. He was convinced that ignorance, the mother of so much evil, was alone responsible for this outbreak, and hoped that a longer residence in Palmer and a more intimate acquaintance with its schools and churches would increase the intelligence of these unfortunate fanatics and arouse in them kindlier feelings. Should they, however, prove impervious to good influences, he did not anticipate any particular harm, since he was certain that the majority of the Protestant citizens of Palmer had too much good sense and fairness to join in a wicked and unprovoked attack upon their Catholic neighbors. The reverend gentleman cautioned his people against being provoked into any act that might bring disgrace upon their religion. Every unkind and malicious insult, either to their priest or to their faith, was a benefit instead of an injury, since it only served to unite them more firmly together, while it secured for them the sympathy and good will of all good Americans who love justice and hate anything that savors of persecution. Concluding, Father Hart advised his hearers to follow the advice of St. Paul in the epistle read that day in the mass: "Render to no man evil for evil; if it be possible, have peace with all men. Revenge not yourselves. But if thy enemy be hungry, give him to eat; if he thirst, give him drink; for doing this, thou shalt heap coals of fire on his head. Be not overcome by evil, but overcome evil by good."

On Monday James Devine of Providence was sent to the house of correction for three months for drunkenness. Frederick Turner of Holyoke was sent to the state farm at Bridgewater for two years for vagrancy. Turner has quite a record in the local court. The first time he was sent up was in 1890, when he went to the house of correction for three months. He reappeared with considerable regularity until 1893, when he went to Bridgewater for a year. He was released at the expiration of his sentence, and inside of a week was back in the tramp room at Palmer for the night; refusing to break stone in the morning he was sent back to Bridgewater for two years,—in June, '94. He was released about a week ago, a little before his time was out, and was given some clothing and a small sum of money. He made a bee line for Holyoke, and in less than seven days from his discharge was back in Palmer for another term of two years at the state farm, where he says he enjoys life immensely and don't have to work very hard.

In spite of the unfavorable weather a large audience was present at the Congregational church last Friday evening to listen to "The story that transformed the world," as told by Timothy Drake, and to look upon the views of the Passion Play of Oberammergau. The phonograph and megaphone captivated the people as they listened to the music and character sketches reproduced. Not the least interesting was the song, "Old Uncle John," as sung by "Prof Chapman of Thorndike."

The various numbers on the programme showed her to be at home in all styles of literature, and expressions of pleasure were heard on all sides."—New York Herald. "A feature of the after-dinner programme was the playing of Miss Annie Frank Libby, who rendered some delightful harp solos. Her selections were given with musicianly conception and fine artistic effect."—Boston Herald. NEIGHBORHOOD NOTES.

MONSON.

TOWN FARM INMATES FARE WELL.

Reports to the Contrary Prove to Have No Foundation in Fact.

Monson has been treated to a sensation during the past week. There has been in circulation a copy of a letter written by a young woman in Worcester, formerly of this place, whose father was for a time an inmate of Monson's town farm. This letter alleges horrible cruelty on the part of the warden and matron of the farm to the town's wards, and states that the town is being defrauded by the warden. Monson people were naturally very much excited over the affair, and an investigation has been made. The overseers of the poor, who look after these matters very closely, had no fears that the statements were true, but to make doubly certain paid the place a special visit, talked with the inmates, and found them perfectly satisfied. Newspaper representatives also called and were shown over the place and talked privately with the inmates. One of them, Thomas Roberts, was told that if he had even the smallest grievance then was a first-class time to air it. He replied that there was but one little thing which he would like different; he would like to be allowed to visit the village as freely in the winter as in the summer. Mr. Rice said that he had never in any way been ill-treated, and had all he wanted to eat, and that the food was good. Dennis Leary said that he had never found fault, nor had occasion to. Roswell Pease has made like statements in the village. Mr. Carew, the warden, invited inspection of the house and buildings, all of which were found to be in excellent condition. The house from garret to cellar was scrupulously clean. The sleeping quarters are furnished with comfortable beds and an abundance of coverings, all in excellent order. The rooms were also heated. The inmates were warmly and cleanly clad, and had every appearance of being well cared for. Mrs. Carew said that according to the custom of her predecessors, she served but two meals a day from Thanksgiving to April; that breakfast at 8 and dinner at 4 had been deemed sufficient, and that at both meals meat was served without stint. She said that when three meals were the order, breakfast and dinner included meat, but that the supper was light, consisting of bread and butter and tea, with cake or pie.

In regard to the alleged ill-treatment and subsequent death of Alfred Bennett last summer, the story of Mrs. Carew and Mr. Roberts agreed perfectly. The man was subject to fits, and died in one at the age of 82. According to the statements of the overseers of the poor, as well as Warden and Matron Carew, the man whose stories have aroused this commotion was a privileged character, as it was understood that his board should be paid. This understanding was in a measure carried out, but there is still an arrearage of $50, or thereabouts. Regarding himself as a boarder, the man, Mr. Carew stated, occasionally asked for articles of food which were not on the table, but did not offer serious complaint, and seemed to have a friendly feeling when he went away in November. These and many other interesting points which were brought to light show that there are two sides to the case. If the inmates or ex-inmates have told one story to one person and a contradictory story to another person, it is but fair to give Mr. and Mrs. Carew the full benefit of the doubt, and this, it is safe to say, the townspeople will be glad to do.

Trouble Over a House.

C. H. Wright has moved into his new house, but not without a protest on the part of the builders, Maguire and Darling, and the proceedings have been watched with interest. The contract price was $1050, and alterations were made in the plans which made extra cost, for which Mr. Wright promised to pay. Mr. Wright says that when the bill was presented only one coat of paint had been put on, and the contract called for two; also that the bill for extras included items which were in the original contract. He states that Mr. Maguire acknowledged this, but said that he was losing money at the price agreed upon. Mr. Wright refused to pay it in full, however, and was also unwilling to pay for the second coat of paint until it was put on. While the bickering was going on, Rogers & Co. trusteed Maguire's money, which Mr. Wright held, and Howe & Pease did likewise by Mr. Darling. Darling settled immediately. Mr. Wright says that Maguire was unwilling to give him the keys to the house, and he forced an entrance by the way of the cellar, as he had a furnace fire with which to dry the paper on the walls, and that Mr. Maguire removed the lock and barred the door. Officer Osborne was put in charge of the house, and it is said has had some exciting experiences with the various members of the builders' families. Mr. Wright says that Maguire told him Wednesday that he himself was wrong, and should make no further fuss. Mrs. Maguire tells a different story. She says that Wright distinctly told her husband that he did not wish the second coat of paint put on until spring, and intimates that Mr. Wright influenced the South Monson dealers to trustees. She also says that the affair will be settled by a process of law, and that the carpenters are soon to attach the house. Developments are awaited with interest.

Universalists in Convention.

The meeting of the Union Association of Universalist churches, which was held Tuesday in the Monson church all day and evening, was well attended, and was full of interest. The delegates from out of town, numbering in the vicinity of 75 were as follows: Palmer 30, Stafford 20, Springfield 10, Worcester 5, with one and two from several other towns. In the morning a meeting of the Western Massachusetts Ministerial Association was held, at which Rev. T. C. Druley of Stafford, Ct., read a paper entitled, "From my study window: the Universalist outlook." A bountiful dinner was served by the ladies of the home church. The afternoon session began at 2 o'clock; after the devotional service several 15-minute papers were presented, as follows: "The local newspaper; how to secure its assistance in parish advancement," Rev. F. T. Sweet of Gardner; "non contributors to the parish; how to enlist their sympathy and obtain their financial aid," Rev. B. F. Eaton of Worcester; "Transferred families: the welcome they should receive in their new church home," Mrs. H. F. Moulton of Palmer; "Our ecclesiastical neighbors: how we may learn and profit by their improved methods of work," Cory F. Wood of Springfield; "The district missionary: suggestions and plans for a forward movement," Rev. Charles Conklin of Springfield. These papers were followed by a general discussion and supper. The evening service was also well attended, and these addresses were given: "The Universalist type of piety," Rev. G. W. Penniman of Southbridge; "Universalism as an antidote to doubt," Rev. J. B. Reardon of Westfield; "The comfort of the Universalist faith," Rev. R. S. Kellerman of Orange.

Harry T. Chapin returned Saturday to Boston.

Mrs. George C. Flynt returned Wednesday from Brooklyn.

J. T. Squier of Stafford Springs spent Tuesday with friends in town.

Miss Nellie Shugrue of Springfield is visiting her sister, Mrs. Arthur F. Johnson.

Mr. and Mrs. Fred White of Boston have been spending a part of the week in town.

John S. Bogan has sold the Carney estate on Bridge street to John McKenna of South Monson.

Miss Lenore Blackford of Eldorado, Ohio, is visiting her brother, Rev. Harry Blackford.

Mrs. Edward King returned Monday from a visit to her daughter, Mrs. C. Oscar Thompson.

Mrs. Julia A. Griggs fell down stairs last Friday in Elliot Brown's house, and is still confined to her bed.

Mrs. William A. Lincoln of Springfield has been spending the week with her mother, Mrs William N. Flynt.

A social dance was held in Stonecutter's hall last night, for which the Monson Orchestral Club furnished music.

Several cases of diphtheria are reported on the "Plains," the families of Wallace and Saulsbury being the afflicted ones.

The W. N. Flynt Granite Co. has purchased of B. M. Fairfield three imported Holsteins, each with a milk record of 20 quarts a day.

Nicholas P. Hanley was confined to the house several days with a severe cold, and George H. Norcross took his place in Herbert C. Norcross's store.

Rev. A. B. Bassett of Ware addressed the students yesterday afternoon in the Academy chapel in observance of the day of prayer for schools and colleges.

Mrs. J. W. Brown was called suddenly to Springfield this week to attend the funeral of her uncle, B. P. Robbins, who was injured by the electric cars some two years ago.

Rev. Frank Blackford is visiting his brother, Rev. Harry Blackford. Mr. Blackford is on his way to Portland, Oregon, where he has accepted a call to be pastor of the First Universalist church.

Mrs. Myron Bradway attended the funeral of her adopted sister, Mrs. Emily Steele, at New Britain to-day. Mrs. Steele died Tuesday at the age of 60. She was somewhat known in Monson, having visited here.

The Junior Epworth League of the Methodist church will have a sociable and entertainment in the vestry next Friday evening. There will be an oyster supper from 6 to 8. The entertainment will include a dialogue entitled "The Mission Band," also recitations and music.

Programme for Lino next Friday evening: Essay, Converse; news of the two weeks ending Feb. 7, Davis; debate, "Resolved, that Henry IV of France was not justified in renouncing Protestantism," affirmative, Bennett, negative, Needham; declamations, Thacker and Adams.

Owing to the large advance sale of tickets for the Academy course of entertainments, it has been found necessary to hold the entertainments in Memorial Hall instead of the chapel. The first concert comes to-night: Wulf Fries, 'cellist; Signor Fabiani, harpist and pianist; Prof. J. S. R. Coy and Mrs. H. L. Chickering, vocal solos and duets.

Miss Mabel N. Rose and Clarence W. Wilcox were married at the home of Mr. Wilcox's brother, William H. Wilcox, on Lincoln street, Wednesday afternoon at 3.30. The bride wore a dress of navy blue with pink waist trimmings. The ceremony was performed with a ring by Rev. Mr. Marble. The couple left on the 5 o'clock train.

There is a prospect that Monson may have a telephone exchange early this spring. There has been in town this week two representatives of the New England company, Messrs. Taintor and Beale, who have looked the ground over and canvassed for subscribers. If 25 names are secured it is probable that the preliminary work will begin at once.

A reader of the JOURNAL in New York state writes: "In 1840 I attended a soiree at the 'Uncle Amos Tavern' in Monson. It was a grand affair for three days. The hall for dancing was the whole front of the second story. Albert Whitney, G. Ives and W. N. Flynt were the managers. Will you suggest, instead of hotel that it be called 'Century Inn'?"

No. 8 schoolhouse is to have all three schoolrooms sheathed and double windows put on. In overhauling the furnaces it was found that the firepots are broken in both, and at a meeting of the school committee Wednesday evening it was voted to buy new firepots. The advisability of doing this is questioned by some, as they will cost nearly $100 and will probably not last more than two, or perhaps three years at the most. The heating system has never been a success and many would like to see a radical change made.

Rev. W. H. Marble will, by the request of the young men, deliver a series of short addresses to men in the Methodist church Sunday mornings at 10 30, beginning next Sunday and continuing until March 29, inclusive, with the exception of March 1, when the address will be at 4 p. m. The subjects will be as follows: "A Man," "A Faithful Man," "A Mean Man," "A Great Man," "Devices of Satan to Catch Men," "Sin of Tobacco Using," "Sin of Drunkenness," Sin of Profanity," "The Final Reckoning."

On next Tuesday at Memorial Hall there be an all-day session of the Massachusetts Dairy Bureau, under the auspices of the Eastern Hampden Agricultural Society. The programme promises to be an interesting one, and the public is cordially invited to attend. Dinner will be served at noon in Grand Army Hall by the Marcus Keep Woman's Relief Corps. The speaking will be as follows: "Barn Ventilation," George L. Clemence of Southbridge; "Variations in the Quality of Milk," with illustrations, George M. Whittaker, Boston; "Economical Feeding of Milch Cows," by Prof. J. B. Lindsey of Amherst.

The choir and Sunday school of St. Patrick's church, who were entertained by the choir and Sunday school of the Stafford Springs Catholic church, will return the hospitality Monday evening, February 17. A supper will be served, after which the company will attend the entertainment given under the auspices of the St. Vincent de Paul at Memorial Hall. The Springfield Dramatic company will present "The Busybody," after which there will be dancing. The Monson Orchestral Club will furnish music. The object of this society is to raise money for charitable purposes, and besides helping to support a family of small children, at Christmas gave it about $40 to other needy people.

DEATH OF ELIJAH SHAW OF WALES.

The Most Prominent Citizen of the Town, and one of the Founders of Shaw University at Raleigh, N. C.

Elijah Shaw of Wales, 76, the most prominent man in that town and one of the founders of Shaw University, Raleigh, N. C., died at his home Tuesday morning at 11 o'clock. Mr. Shaw had been ill since Thanksgiving, but not seriously so until within a month. His illness was caused by a stomach trouble, but his death was due immediately to heart disease. He leaves a widow, a son, Herbert E. Shaw, and a daugter, Mrs. John C. Burley, all living in Wales; also two brothers, Salem J. of West Sutton, and Eden D. of Wales.

Mr. Shaw was born in Wales May 29, 1819. He received a very limited education in the public schools, and when a mere lad began work with his father, Solomon Shaw, who was a blacksmith, and who, during the war of 1812, was employed in the government armory at Millbury. He did not like that business and did not long continue in it. His next venture was bottoming shoes. He used to drive to Hartford, Ct., for the leather and take it to Wales, where he bottomed the shoes, returning them to Hartford. At the age of 17 he employed 16 men in Wales in this industry. For several years Mr. Shaw continued in this business, but after a time began the manufacture of axes and hoes, manufacturing the first socket-hoes ever made in this country. During this time Mr. Shaw was a commercial traveler for the firm, being one of the pioneer drummers of the country. Afterward with the aid of his brother, the manufacture of carriages was engaged in for several years, Mr. Shaw making annual trips through New England, New York, Pennsylvania and into eastern Ohio, at that time a newly-settled country, to sell his vehicles, a long string of which was drawn by one or two horses.

The capital required in his various enterprises had been entirely accumulated by his own untiring efforts. His father was never able to give him any financial assistance, but Mr. Shaw didn't need it. His son has in his possession a book which his father bought when a boy, giving in exchange for it two summers' labor at haying on a Wales farm. In 1848 Mr. Shaw bought an interest in a small woolen mill in Wales, and a little later he and his brother Warren secured a controlling interest in the mill, and also bought the woolen mill owned and operated by the Wales family, after whom the town was named. He continued in the woolen industry until about 1889, and during his life built and rebuilt five mills in Wales. Some of them are gone now, but the largest, the Berkley mill, is still operated by Mr. Shaw's son, Herbert.

Mr. Shaw's mills were built from home materials. The timber for the lumber was cut on his own lots and the lumber sawed in his own mill. The clay for the bricks was also dug on his land and the bricks made and burned in his own brickyard. He seemed to possess to an unusual degree the faculty of making the most of everything at his hand. The mills were built under his supervision, from plans made by himself. Mr. Shaw built many houses in Wales, and at one time and another owned much real estate there. Practically all the business of the town has been developed by him. It is estimated that his investments in that town have aggregated $500,000, and he was practically the constructor of that pleasant village. In 1874 Mr. Shaw built the Wales Baptist church, at a cost of $20,000, and presented it to the Baptist society. At the close of the war he was instrumental in founding Shaw University in Raleigh, N. C., and was its first benefactor. This university is one of the foremost in the country for the education of the colored race, and was named for Mr. Shaw. Mr. Shaw was a Baptist and took a deep interest in religious matters. He was a Republican in politics and served two terms in the Legislature. He had held almost all the offices within the gift of the town, but for many years has refused to take any position. His benevolences were many and varied, and a large number of friends will mourn his death.

Since 1889 he had given up active business cares, spending much of his time out of doors. He took great delight in farming and agricultural pursuits, and in late years spent much of his time in reclaiming rocky and swampy land, making meadows which have produced some wonderful crops of hay. In this pursuit he has built miles of stone wall in the last few years. He was active in religious and educational matters at all times, and only last summer gave a site for a schoolhouse in the center of the village, across the valley from the church which he built.

The funeral was held this afternoon at 2 o'clock, and was conducted by Rev. G. W. Davis of the Baptist church, assisted by Rev. Mr. Camp of the Methodist church and Rev. H. P. Smith of Worcester, recently of Wales. There were also present and spoke Charles F. Meserve, A. M., president of Shaw University, Prof. Norman of the theological department of the university, Hon. James H. Young of Raleigh, N. C. and Rev. H. M. Morehouse, D. D., of New York, corresponding secretary of the American Baptist Home Missionary Society. There were many tributes of beautiful flowers, among them being large pieces from Mr. Shaw's Sunday school class of young ladies, from the pastor's class of young men, and from the employes in the mill of his son, H. E. Shaw. The Henschel Quartette of Springfield sang.

Taylor--Ross.

A very pleasant wedding took place at the home of Simon Taylor on Tuesday evening at 6 o'clock in the presence of the family and a few relatives. Rev. G. W. Davis tied the knot, and the bride was Miss Mary Taylor, the groom being Dr. Elsworth F. Ross. The bride was dressed in white, and wore yellow roses and maiden-hair ferns. The decorations were white and pink carnations. The doctor's sick patients will not allow him to go on a wedding tour, so they will spend a week at the home of the bride, after which they will go to housekeeping in Shaw's block on Main street, where he now has his office. Many of their friends called on them after the wedding to offer congatulations.

Boy's Narrow Escape.

Frank Hill, a boy of 10 years, narrowly escaped death Saturday. He was running with his head down, and ran under a pair of heavy team horses attached to a sled. The horses passed over him and the sled run over his legs. He was picked up unconscious, but soon revived and was not seriously injured. The horses' shoes had just been sharpened, and had they stepped on him he would have been seriously hurt, if not killed.

LEGISLATIVE MATTERS.

BOSTON, Jan. 29, 1896.

The Legislature is disposed to look out more sharply this year than usual for the expenses of the state government. Of course it cannot be foreseen whether the zeal will hold out till the end of the session, through the warm days of spring and the pressure of national politics and the desire of the representatives to get home; but the sentiment is in a healthy condition now, and ought to be cherished faithfully through to the end. It came to the front in the debate in the House over the deficiency bill. Mr. J. H. Mellen of Worcester called to account the commissioners and department officers, who, without authority of the Legislature, had exceeded their appropriations. It was shown by Mr. Lowell of Boston, in behalf of the committee on ways and means, that the money—for instance, that for the Worcester normal school—had been spent honestly, and that it was all needed for the good of the state; the people ought not to have been satisfied with a meager appropriation in the first place. But he agreed with Mr. Mellen's criticism in the main. The latter said that he did not challenge the bill for the sake of defeating its passage, but in order to draw attention to a bad practice and see if something could not be done to stop it.

The overhauling of the practice of some of the commissions of consulting lawyers outside of the attorney general's office is another interesting point. Under the order of the House as it was finally adopted and adhered to, in spite of efforts at amendment, the inquiry is to include not only all the legal, but the other expenses of the department for 1884, 1885, 1894 and 1895. This will give a basis of comparison as to the growth of the business of the office in recent years, and will help to show whether the practices of the office have become more luxurious. The judiciary committee has been making a thorough inquiry into the method of running the attorney general's office. Mr. Knowlton has been before them and has been subjected to a searching inquiry as to the practices of the office and the amount of work which he personally has given to it.

The report of the committee on metropolitan affairs that the project of a metropolitan county ought to be referred to the next Legislature will not surprise those who have followed the case. The large loss which would fall upon Norfork county, besides the smaller proportionate loss of Middlesex and Essex counties, was sufficient reason for not acting upon this most important matter without further popular consideration.

The commission which made the report will have time to advocate its plans before the next Legislature meets, and the people will grasp the plan more clearly.

A widely concerted effort is being made all over the state to induce the Legislature to authorize the erection of an equestrian statue in honor of "Fighting Joe Hooker," on the state house grounds. Piles of petitions come in, showing that some hearty work is being put in for the cause. But a sober second thought on the part of some of the western Massachusetts people is that the statue ought not to be on the state house grounds, but somewhere in the Connecticut valley in the neighborhood of Hooker's birthplace. He was born in Hadley. The first hearing on the petition occurred Wednesday forenoon, and ex-Gov. Boutwell, Gen. Francis A. Walker and other distinguished men were present to speak for the statue. All was going on smoothly when a remonstrant by the name of Curtis, who served under Hooker, put in opposition, saying that Hooker was dismissed from his command in disgrace, that he was reprimanded by President Lincoln, that he became intoxicated on duty, and that he resigned his position and left the army in the face of the enemy, a proceeding which would have subjected him to a court martial if it had been done by a private soldier. This put a new phase on the affair, and in order to accommodate those who wanted to reply to the aspersions upon the old hero's character, the hearing was adjourned, when the petitioners will be given another opportunity.

The effort of former years to repeal the law which exempts church property from taxation has been renewed this year. The situation has two sides. Some of the support for the bill comes from those who want to take away the exemption so that the Catholic churches will be obliged to pay taxes on their property. But the law knows no distinction of sect, and if the exemption were repealed, all the Protestant churches would have to be taxed the same as the Catholics. But this is a very narrow ground of argument. The broad consideration is whether it is for the promotion of the highest good of the state to encourage church-building to the extent of saying that citizens who devote so much of their property for religious and moral purposes, wholly apart from any private or personal use, shall be exempt from paying taxes on it.

The colored member from Boston, Mr. Reed, has revived the old project of allowing a voter to vote the straight party ticket on the Australian ballot by making a single cross at the head of the list of party candidates. Such a measure has been defeated repeatedly, for it would defeat the very purpose of the Australian act. It would make it possible for a spotter to tell whether a voter was voting the straight ticket or not by the time it required to mark the ballot, and it would put an end to the educating, discriminating influence of the present system. The bill is a direct and dangerous blow at the efficiency of the Australian system.

The architect who has lately examined the state house finds that the Senate chamber is safe for all the weight which will be put upon it, which is reassuring.

Things have begun to move in the direction of a new union station on the south side of Boston. Colonel J. H. Benton, Jr., counsel for the New York, New Haven and Hartford railroad, has put in a petition in its behalf that it may take all of the real estate from its station in Kneeland street as far east as Federal street. This will extend the railroad property so far that there will be only the width of Federal street and a short distance in addition between the property of the Consolidated road and the passenger station of the New York and New England railroad. Evidently the plan is to bring the latter road further west into the city, and have it cross Federal street into the union station. The Boston and Albany road has its station only one short block west of the Consolidated's station, better known as the Old Colony station, on Kneeland street. It will be no difficult matter to bring these stations under one roof. There remains the Park Square station of the Consolidated, and it does not yet appear what will be done with it. But there seems to be no doubt that all of the roads on the south of Boston, like those on the north, will eventually find accommodation in one large union station.

The feature of the hearing on Friday upon biennial elections was the address of George Fred Williams and the sharp questioning to which he was submitted by the committee. He was particularly sharp in his denunciation of the corporate and commercial spirit of the times, which he charged to be responsible for much political corruption and with being the chief instigator of the present movement for biennials. He was particularly warm in his praise of the intellectual capacity of the working men on political matters, and said that half a dozen leading men from a labor union could be pitted against any half dozen from any board of trade in the state in discussion of political matters, and the board of trade would be floored every time. He spoke of the character of the United States Senate, being composed largely of rich men elected for six years, so that they do not feel their responsibility to popular opinion. He insisted that the best possible corrective of a legislator was his responsibility to the people, and argued that the adoption of the amendment for biennials would surely result in poorer Legislatures, in increased corruption. This is one phase of the great battle of the peop'e, he said, for their rights against the power of capital and of corporations. Ex-Mayor Hayes of Lynn was in charge of the hearing for the remonstrants against biennials. He insisted strongly upon his staunch Republicanism and made an effective speech. Each side has put forth its utmost effort. The biennial men have been represented by leading business men and boards of trade all over the state, and by many leading Republicans and Democrats, arguing that better legislation would result from biennials. Never before was the struggle so sharp. LANDON.

ARMOUR'S FOOD EXHIBIT.

Here all this week. Every woman invited to attend the demonstration. A dainty lunch served free.

If ever your money can be made to do double duty it is just now when every department is striving its utmost to keep you coming for things you need.

PRIESTLEY'S DRESS FABRICS.

A woman came Saturday with three samples cut a day or two before---the goods were gone, every yard of 'em. She took more samples---wonder if they'll be gone when she comes again? It isn't safe to take samples of such a lot, and be sure. When such goods are going at such a price, better grab 'em quick. But the worst of these will be bargains after the best are gone ---$1 to $1.75 sorts at 79 cents a yard.

Right aisle.

TEAZLE-DOWN WRAPPERS.

There's no money in 'em at such a price --- $1.39! No. But how much is it worth in good-will, think you, to have a thousand women wearing such wrappers that they get for so little? We don't know.

Main floor of Pynchon street building.

But the story is too long for to-day. We can tell of women's knit underwear at closing-out prices; muslin underwear at January sale figures; men's white unlaundered shirts and night shirts at once-a-year prices; 50-cent printed India silks at 29 cents a yard, and so on and on and on. Take this for granted; it is a good time to buy any kind of goods.

It's Education—simply a matter of education—the use of Pearline for washing and cleaning. The bright women, those who learn quickly, are using it now. The brighter the woman, the larger her use of it—the more good uses she finds to which she can put Pearline. Dull women, those who never use new things until their bright sisters have drummed it into them—they'll use it presently. It's just a question of sooner or later, with every woman who wants the best.

Beware Peddlers and some unscrupulous grocers will tell you, "this is as good as" or "the same as Pearline." IT'S FALSE—Pearline is never peddled, and if your grocer sends you something in place of Pearline, it's the honest thing—and it's bad. 720 JAMES PYLE, New York.

Kidney Disease

Cured, Says Druggist Lyman Crawford, Springfield, Mass.

Lyman Crawford, proprietor of the popular "Crawford Pharmacy," of Springfield, Mass., writes: "For years I was afflicted with kidney disease in its most acute form. I tried different kinds of treatment and spent a great deal of money, only to find myself worse than ever. Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy—I say it with a perfect recollection of all that was done for me—is the only thing that did me the slightest good. It gave me permanent relief. I am now well and strong. I have recommended this medicine to many people for kidney disease, and they all agree with me in saying that has not its equal in the wide world for this distressing and often fatal complaint.

Such a recommendation means that Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy cures disease. It is a never failing specific in diseases of the skin, liver, kidneys and blood, the diseases and weaknesses peculiar to women. It cures scrofula, salt rheum and erysipelas. For nervousness, loss of sleep, or that worn out feeling, it has no equal. In cases of dyspepsia, gravel, Bright's disease, diabetes and bladder troubles, it has cured where all other treatments have failed. All druggists. $1.

LARRABEE'S RHEUMATIC LINIMENT

The Young Man Waited.

In the room below the young man sat,
With an anxious face and a white cravat,
With a throbing heart, and a silken hat,
And various other things like that
Which he had accumulated.
And the maid of his heart was up above,
Surrounded by hat and gown and glove,
And some thousand things that women love,
But no man knows the name thereof,
And the young man sat and—waited.

You will scarce believe the things I tell,
But the truth thereof I know full well,
Though how may not be stated.
But I swear to you that the maiden took
A sort of a half breed, thin stove hook
And heated it well in the gaslight there
And thrust it into her head of hair!
Then she took something off the bed
And hooked it onto her hair, or head.
Then she piled it high and piled it higher,
And drove it home with staples of wire,
And the young man anxiously—waited.

Then she took a thing she called a puff,
And some very peculiar, whitish stuff,
And, using about a half a peck,
She spread it over her face and neck
(Deceit was a thing she hated.)
She looked as fair as the purest flower,
Or a pound of lard, or a sack or flour,
And the young man wearily—waited.

Then she took a garment of awful shape,
And it wasn't a waist nor yet a cape,
But seemed like a piece of ancient mail
Or a instrument from a Russian jail,
And then, with a fearful groan and gasp,
She squeezed herself in its deadly clasp,
So fair and yet so fated!
And then, with a move like I don't know what
She tied it on with a double knot,
And the young man woefully—waited.

Then she put on a dozen different things,
A mixture of buttons and hooks and strings,
Till she strongly resembled a notion store.
Then, taking some seventeen pins or more,
She thrust them into her ruby lips,
Then stuck them around from neck to hips,
And never once hesitated.
And the maiden didn't know perhaps
That the young man below had had seven naps,
And that now he sleepily—waited.

And then she tried to put on her hat,
Ah, me, a trying ordeal was that!
She tipped it high, and she tried it low,
But every way that the thing would go
Only made her the more agitated.
It wouldn't go straight and it caught her hair,
And she wished she could hire a man to swear,
But, alas, the only man lingering there
Was the man who wildly—waited.

And then, before she could take her leave,
She had to pump up her monstrous sleeve,
Then a little dab here, and a wee bat there,
And a touch or two to her hindmost hair.
Then around the room with the utmost care
She thoughtfully circulated.

Then she siezed her gloves and a chamois skin,
Some breath perfume and a long stickpin,
A bonbon box and a cloak and some
Eau de cologne and chewing gum,
Her opera glasses and sealskin muff,
A fan and a heap of other stuff.
Then she hurried down, but ere she spoke,
Something about the maiden broke.
So she scurried back to the winding stair,
And the young man looked in wild despair,
And they he—evaporated.

BLOW, IF YOU HAVEN'T THE PENNY.

The two men stood in front of the penny-in-the-slot weighing machine, looking red in the face, as though from some immense muscular exertion.

"Now, let me see if I read the directions right," said one, taking another look at the paragraph in a newspaper. "Yes, we tried it right. This is what it says:—

"'All that is necessary if you wish to be weighed on a penny-in-the-slot machine, and haven't got the money, is to apply your lips to the slot and blow hard. The air cannot escape, and pressure will set the machine in operation at once.'

"Well, I'll be blowed if I can do it," said he. "You try it once. Maybe your lungs are stronger than mine."

As the other man stepped on the platform to take a try at it, several passers-by, attracted by the odd sight, stopped to see the operation. Soon a party was gathered around the machine.

In vain did the man puff and blow until he almost burst the buttons from his waistcoat.

"I give it up," said he, casting a sheepish look at the crowd that gave him the laugh.

Just then a bootblack, with a grimy face but bright eyes, wiggled through the crowd.

"Aw, dat's dead easy," said he. "Just let me show de mug how to do it," and then he climbed on the platform, put his lips to the slot and blew. Not so very hard, either, but a click was heard, the pointer flew around and told the wondering crowd that the "kid" weighed 94 pounds.

"It's a cinch," was the contemptuous remark of the urchin. "Try it again."

Another man tried it, and again was the proverb verified about the battle not always being to the strong.

The crowd wondered.

"How do you do it, kid?" said one.

"Humph, dat's tellin'," he replied. "I win more money at dat game dan I ken lose shooting de cubes."

"Give you a quarter to tell."

"It's a go, boss. Now watch me," and the urchin climbed on the machine again.

"Gi' me a cent," said he.

"What for?" asked the man.

"What fur? Why, to stick in me mug; den I puts me mout' on de slot and pokes in de cent wid me tongue, see? Dat's what fur. It's dead easy when yer on. Savvy?"

The crowd "savvied."

FINGER ON CHIN, THINK OF MONEY.

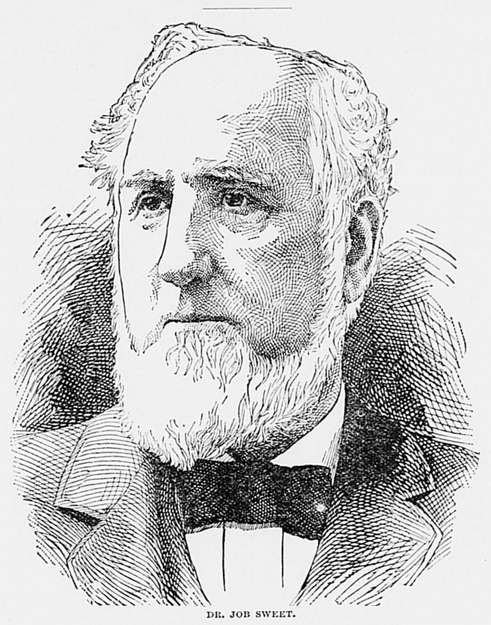
"I know of what you are thinking," said one woman to another, one day lately. "Shall I tell you?" Her friend replied: "It is impossible for you to guess; I was worrying over a care which you do not imagine I possess. "That is true," was the response "I am surprised to see that you are fretting over money matters." The other stared at her. "Are you a necromancer?" she exclaimed. "No; a Sherlock Holmes," was gayly retorted. "But that is quite extraordinary. How could even a Sherlock Holmes penetrate my thoughts?" "By the observance of a simple rule. You put a finger to your chin while you sat in that long, brown study. That signifies that mercenary matters are worrying you. If you had leaned your hand on your cheek I should have told you that affairs of the heart concerned you. If it was something of the brain alone, as overwork, you would have raised your hand to your head." The listener shook her head. "That sounds like a fairy tale," she said. "Nevertheless, try it any time you like," responded her friend, "and see if you ever make a mistake. And, more than that, you may tell what part of a person is affected by illness in the same way. The forehead contracts in a brain trouble or headache, and the eyes, also, show those diseases. The nose and under the eyes betray sickness in the chest and stomach, and the lips and chin may be watched for anything wrong with the lower members of the body. That really is a help in dealing with illness in a child too young to tell where it feels a pain."—New York Times.

"Does this train stop at Jimtown?" asked a passenger of a porter on a Monon train, bound from Chicago to Cincinnati yesterday. "No, sah," was the quick answer: "dis is the express. It do not stop at Jimtown; it do not even hesitate, sah."—Cincinnati Times-Star.

DR. GREENE'S NERVURA.

Physicians Urgently Advise Use of Dr. Greene's Nervura.

Well Known Physicians Enthusiastic in Their Statements of the Wonderful Curative Powers of Dr. Greene's Nervura.



DR. JOB SWEET.

One of the most noted physicians and surgeons is Dr. Job Sweet of New Bedford, Mass. He makes the public statement that he has often recommended the use of Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy to his patients who have been suffering from nervous troubles and he has learned that in a large number of these cases it has proven efficacious.

Dr. Willard H. Morse, F. B. S. Sc., of Westfield, N. J., the great expert on medicines, says of this grand discovery of Dr. Greene:—

"The true remedy for nervous diseases is Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy. It acts by affecting the organs of nutrition, and entering into the formation of new nerve tissue, which generates nerve force. This means the making of new nerves."

The well-known Dr. Emil Neumer, superintending physician of the N. Y. Lodge and Association Hospital says:—

"We are using Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy at this hospital for our patients with good success."

Dr. B. D. Bickford of Wolcott, Vt., states:—

"I have used Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy for some time, first trying it on myself, and I found it did me so much good that I now recommend it to my patients. The fact that I have used it in my own case shows that I know what I am talking about. As a tonic and invigorant it is the best of all to build up a person."

Dr. Robert W. Lance of So. Woodbury, Vt., says:—

'I have known about Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy and the good results in cases, as a tonic, after hard sickness, and the cure of nervous females. They have received great good from its use. I do not hesitate to recommend it."

Dr. C. W. Cook, of Carmel, Ind., says:—

"I have used Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy for my patients and have found the remedy all that was claimed for it. The results have been entirely satisfactory. I think it is worthy and I recommend its use."

Such enthusiastic endorsement by physicians stamps this remarkable medical discovery as the greatest restorer of health and strength. It certainly cures more cases of disease than any other known remedy. It makes all who take it strong and well. It is the prescription and discovery of a well-known physician, Dr. Greene, of 34 Temple Place, Boston, Mass., who can be consulted without charge, personally or by letter.

THE MAGICIAN AND THE CHIEF'S DOG.

"Nothing so completely mystifies an Indian," said Captain Partello at the Officers' club recently; "as to witness the operations of some itinerant sleight-of-hand performer, many of whom find their way into the sparsely settled portions of the Northwest, where they are always sure to reap a good harvest. Prof. McAllister, the magican, once visited a camp of River Crows on the Yellowstone, and, after extracting various packs of cards and other articles from the ears, necks, noses and garments of the astonished Indians, was invited to a big feast of roast dog and other delicacies. Chief Two Belly was so impressed by the great medicine powers of the professor that he took him to his wigwam, introducing him to his daughter, Miss Wicista-Neeta (meaning Wild Cat) and offered her for a wife at the low price of two ponies. The feast and daughter were both declined, but as McAllister was leaving the tepee he spied a lean, yellow cur. He asked Chief Two Belly how much he would take for the dog, at the same time stroking the brute down the back to his tail length, and each time taking a handful of money from the end of his tail.

"'Him very valuable dog,' said McAllister picking a coin out of the dog's eye and another out of his nose. Two ponies for him, chief.'

"The Indians, with eyes as big as saucers, stood in awe and astonishment, and shook their heads. After McAllister had gone they carried the poor dog down to the river side and cut him open, but the goose had no golden egg, and they went slowly back to camp as completely dumfounded and as solemn as human beings can possibly be."—Buffalo Express.

NO COURTSHIP IN JERUSALEM.—Of courtship as it is known in America or England there is none whatever in Jerusalem, according to Edwin S. Wallace in the Ladies' Home Journal. A young Mohammedan never sees the face of the girl who is to become his wife until after marriage. His mother and sisters may see her and report their impressions, but if it is a case where the union is by them considered a desirable one they are likely to accredit her with charms she does not possess. Among Jews and Christians there is a greater latitude in this respect, though the young people are never permitted to see each other without the presence of a third party. In every case the services of an intermediary are necessary. Brides at 14 are not uncommon, and at 12 occasion little remark. I have know of none bride 10 years of age. She was a Moslem.

It was in a Caribou church only a week ago Sunday that the choir did not put in an appearance at the opening hour. The pastor arose, glanced at the empty choir seats, and said: "I see the singers are absent this morning. Let all arise and sing, 'Praise God from whom all blessings flow.'"—Lewiston Journal.

"COO-EE-E."

This peculiar cry was one of the signals of the Australian blacks, and was speedily adopted by the invading whites. The final "e" is a kind of screech, and resounds for miles through the bush, thus enabling separated persons to ascertain their relative positions. A popular story runs that two wealthy Australian squatters lost themselves in a London fog, and were only reunited after a series of long coo-ee-es. Once, too, an audience in a London theatre was much startled by hearing this awful cry. It was uttered by an Australian in the upper circle to an old colonial acquaintance in the pit. On another occasion was this cry heard in London. A daring bushranger named Garret, who had spent no fewer than fifty Christmas days in prison, made his appearance in front of a bank at Ballarat, and coolly posted up a notice to the effect that the place would be closed for an hour. He then terrorized the officials and got away with £6000. The authorities received the information that Garret had been seen in London. A colonial detective was immediately dispatched to the mother country to capture him if possible. One day he thought he saw his man walking in the Strand, but not being quite sure, he hit on the bright expedient of uttering a piercing coo-ee-e. The ordinary frequenters of the Strand stood fixed with astonishment, but Garret, acting on the spur of the moment, and recognizing the familiar sound, hastened back and was promptly arrested. He was taken back to Australia and sentenced to ten years' imprisonment.—Tit Bits.

THE PASTOR AND THE GAMBLER.

A. E. Cleland of Dayton, O., tells a good story of a gambler from that city who has made a large fortune out of a saloon and faro-room. Last winter he was in Florida with some friends, and visited a church where a few colored people were engaged in worship. The roof leaked, and the pastor prayed most fervently that the Lord would provide a way to repair the roof. Then a collection was started, the pastor saying that special blessings would be asked for all contributions. One good brother put in a dime.

"A dime from Brudder Jones. De Lo'd bress Brudder Jones."

Then a quarter was received.

'Brudder Johnson a quatah. De Lo'd bress Brother Johnson,"

The collector reached the gamble, who had made a big winning the night before, and flashing his roll, put a $20 bill in the hat.

The almost breathless collector said: "Wha's de name, sah?"

"Never mind the name I'm a gambler from Ohio."

The pastor rolled his eyes up, and raising his hands, said in a voice choking with emotion:

"Twenty dollars—gamblah from Ohio. May de good Lo'd bless and prospar de noble gamblah from Ohio."

The gambler says he has prospered over since.—Washington Star.

THE MODERN IDEAL KITCHEN—"The Ideal Kitchen" is treated at length, described in detail by James Thomson, and illustrated in December Ladies' Home Journal. Mr. Thomson says that in the model kitchen of the present the walls should be of glazed tiles or enameled brick to the height of six or seven feet. In place of these, painted brick or plaster may be used. Soapstone is also excellent. The tiles of brick should be carried clear to the floor, no wooden baseboard must be used. The floor should be of tiles, plain mosaic, stone or cement, all hard and dirt-resisting and easily kept clean. Have as little woodwork as possible, and what you are obliged to have let it be plain with as few joints and crevices as possible. Your cook will at first object to this style of flooring, but a day's care of this cleanly surface will convince her.

"I wonder," said Mrs. Corntassel, as she looked at the newspaper pictures of the yachting trophies, "why they call whut they're racin' for a cup?" "Ain't it a cup?" inquired her husband. "I dunno, Mebbe 'tis. But it looks ter me more like a pitcher."—Washington Star.

If I Knew.

If I knew the box where the smiles were kept,
No matter how large the key
Or strong the bolt, I would try so hard,
'Twould open, I know, for me.
Then over the land and the sea, broadcast
I'd scatter the smiles to play,
That the children's faces might hold them fast
For many and many a day.

If I knew a box that was large enough
To hold all the frowns I meet,
I would like to gather them, every one,
From nursery, school and street.
Then folding, and holding, I'd pack them in,
And, turning the monster key,
I'd hire a giant to drop the box
To the depths of the deep, deep sea.

AMERICAN AND BRITISH WAR SHIPS.

It is known pretty accurately what chance each one of our ships would have against British vessels corresponding more or less with them in strength. The navy department figures down to the smallest gun, the weight of each ship and the thickness of her armor to a fraction of an inch. An examination of these details shows that the cruiser Brooklyn would be more than a match for the British ship Blake. The Brooklyn will be ready for service within a few months. The New York and Blenheim are giant cruisers of about the same size and would be a fair match. The Brooklyn has a better protection than the Blake, and is able to fire a greater weight of projectiles. The unarmored cruiser Baltimore would be likely to defeat the British Arethusa, being speedier and carrying heavier guns. The Boston, likewise an unarmored cruiser, would match the Leander, the Charleston would equal the Phaeton, the Chicago the Mercury, the Cincinnati the Melampus, and the ocean greyhound Columbia the Royal Arthur, the former being three knots faster. All of these are unarmored.

The Detroit might be matched against Great Britian's Alacrity. Of other United States cruisers the Marblehead might be put against the Mildura, the Minneapolis against the Tauranga, the Newark against the Thames, the Olymphia against the Gibraltar, the Philadelphia against the Astrea, the San Francisco against the Lotonia and Raleigh against the Iris.

Uncle Sam's steel battle ship Indiana is now ready for business. In a duel with the British Royal Sovereign she would be likely to come out ahead, inasmuch as she has heavier armor and more speed. Her battery is enormously powerful, comprising four 13-inch guns—the largest ever made for United States vessels—eight 8-inch guns, six 4 inch, 10 6-pounders and four machine guns. Another of our battle ships has already gone into commission—the Maine—and is off on a gunnery trial. She is not so heavily armored as the Indiana, and her guns are not so formidable, consisting of four 10-inch, six 6-inch, eight rapid-fire 6-pounders and a dozen weapons of smaller caliber. Nevertheless, she would almost certainly beat her majesty's Conqueror, the latter being less speedy and not so strongly armed.

The battle ship Massachusetts will go into commission about six months hence. She would have as good a prospect in a conflict with the Royal Oak, as the Indiana against the Royal Sovereign, inasmuch as the latter and the Royal Oak are sisters. The monitor Monterey would be a good match for the British Pelleisle, having about the same battery, two knots more speed and the armor one inch thicker. The battle ship Oregon is a sister of the Indiana and Massachusetts. She is nearly finished and will carry four 13-inch guns, eight 8-inch, and four 6-inch and 20 6-pounders. She might be set off against the Resolution of Great Britian. Our battle ship Texas is now docked at New York, but has not had her final trial yet. She has two 12-inch guns, six 6-inch and 12 6-pounders. Against her might be put the Hero of England. The Texas, however, is superior.

The battle ship Iowa will be an improved Indiana, lighter, but fully as efficient. She would be more than a match for the Majestic. For two of our new battle ships, the Kearsarge and another not yet named, the contracts have not been awarded. They will probably get the better of the Magnificent and Jupiter, both of which are sisters of the Majestic. They have heavier guns then the British vessels and more of them. Against our Puritan might be put the Dreadnaught, and as an antagonist of our Terror the Cyclops. A fair opponent of the Miantonomah would be the Glatton, and of the Monadnock the Agamemnon. Put against our cruiser Atlanta the Amphion, against our Wilmington the Blonde, against our Petrel the Landrail and against our Bennington the Archer. The remaining vessels of the United States navy do not amount to much. We have a number of inferior ships, which may be set off against more or less out-of-date crafts belonging to the British. What do we find after comparing results? Simply the painful conclusion that in respect to sea power we are not in it with Great Britain at all. An equivalent of our entire navy might be subtracted from that of England, and she would hardly notice the loss. We are feeble, and there is no intelligent jingo in this country who would contend that we have a chance with her in fighting on sea.—Washington Letter in Philadelphia Times.

CLOTHES PINS TO STEW?

"What are dried cherries a pound, please?" she asked as she stood in the open door of the Detroit grocery, relates the Free Press.

"Twenty-five cents, ma'am," replied the grocer.

"Good gracious, but that's awful!"

"Regular price, ma'am, and they are very nice."

"But I can't pay no such price as that. I see you have clothes pins at a cent a dozen."

"Yes'm—the very best."

Well, I'll take 15 dozen. The idea of 25 cents a pound for dried cherries at this time o' year! Make it 20 dozen pins, please, and be sure they are fresh stock. I did want some cherries, but—well, make it 25 dozen pins. I don't need it of course, but when I can get clothes pins for a cent a dozen, I'd be foolish to pay such a price for dried cherries."

Marvelous Results.

From a letter written by Rev. J. Gunderman, of Dimondale, Mich., we are permitted to make this extract: "I have no hesitation in recommending Dr. King's New Discovery, as the results were almost marvelous in the case of my wife. While I was pastor of the Baptist church at Rivers Junction she was brought down with pneumonia succeeding la grippe. Terrible paroxysms of coughing would last hours with little interruption, and it seemed as if she could not survive them. A friend recommended Dr. King's New Discovery; it was quick in its work and highly satisfactory in results." Trial bottles free of LeGro & Lynde, Palmer; G. L. Keeney, Monson; F. A. Spencer, Ware. Regular size 50c and $1.00.

Electric Bitters.

Electric Bitters is a medicine suited for any season, but perhaps more generally needed in the spring, when the languid exhausted feeling prevails, when the liver is torpid and sluggish and the need of a tonic and alterative is felt. A prompt use of the medicine has often averted long and perhaps fatal bilious fevers. No medicine will act more surely in counteracting and freeing the system from the malarial poison. Headache, indigestion, consumption, dizziness yield to Electric Bitters. Only fifty cents per bottle of LeGro & Lynde, Palmer; G. L. Keeney, Monson; F. A. Spencer, Ware.

OUR COUNTRY'S REAL ENEMIES.

Ex-President Harrison contributes his prefatory article of a series on "This Country of Ours" he is writing for The Ladies' Home Journal, in the December issue of that magazine. In discussing the country's real enemies in his paper General Harrison says: "The impulse of patriotism needs to be instructed, guided—brought to the wheel—if it is to do the every-day work of American politics. Sentiment? Yes, never too much; but with it, and out of it a faithful discharge of the prosy routine of a citizen's duty. A readiness to go to the field? Yes, and equally to the primaries and to the polls. The real enemies of our country—the dangerous ones—are not the armed men nor armored ships of the great powers. If there is too much exuberance in the thought that we can whip the world it is a safe saying that we can defend our land and coasts against any part of the world that will ever be in arms against us. We are alert as to foreign foes—the drum tap rouses the heaviest sleepers. But we are a dull people as to internal assaults upon the integrity and purity of public administration. Salvation Army methods seem to be needed in politico-moral reforms. It has seemed to me that a fuller knowledge of our civil institutions and a deeper love of them would make us more watchful for their purity; that we would think less of the levy necessary to restore stolen public funds, and more of the betrayal and shame of the thing. A good argument might be made for the wave theory as applied to patriotism, for it seems to have its ups and downs. There are eras when it rises to the combing point, and others when agreed and selfishness rise above it on either side."

The Tapestry Weavers.

Let us take to heart a lesson—
No lesson can truer be—
From the ways of the tapestry weavers
On the other side of the sea.
Above their heads the pattern hangs;
They study it with care,
And while their fingers deftly work,
Their eyes are fastened there.

They tell this curious thing besides,
Of the patient, plodding weaver;
He works on the wrong side evermore,
But works for the right side ever;
It is only when the weaving stops,
And the web is loosed and turned,
That he sees his real handiwork
That his marvelous skill has learned.

Oh! the sight of its delicate beauty,
How it pays him for all its cost;
No rarer, daintier work than his
Was ever done by the frost;
Then the master bringeth golden hire,
And giveth him praise as well,
And how happy the heart of the weaver is,
No tongue but his own can tell.

The years of man are the looms of God
Let down from the place of the sun,
Wherein we are weaving always,
Till the mystic web is done;
Weaving blindly but surely,
Each for himself his fate;
We may not see how the right side looks,
We can only weave, and wait.

But, looking above for the pattern,
No weaver need have fear,
Only let him look clear into heaven,
The perfect Pattern is there;
If he keeps the face of our Saviour
Forever and always in sight,
His toil shall be sweeter than honey,
His weaving is sure to be right.

And when his task is ended,
And the web is turned, and shown,
He shall hear the words of the Master—
It shall say to him, "Well done".
And the white-winged angels of heaven,
To bear him thence shall come down.
And God for his wage shall give him,
Not coin, but a golden crown.

BILLY'S TELEPHONE GIRL.

The city editor sat at his table hard at work the green-shaded electric lamp which hung by a stout cord from the ceiling throwing a white circle of light on the paper over which his pencil traveled. Banwell smoked a cigar; he was always well provided with cigars. The chief of a local staff on an afternoon paper may always be recognized by the fact that you can extract good cigars from almost any part of his clothes. On the opposite side of the table from where Banwell sat was a big cane-bottomed chair with arms on it. Into this chair slid Billy McGuffy, the youngest reporter, somewhat apologetically as far as the demeanor went. Banwell cast one brief glance at him through the smoke, saw who it was, and went on with his work without speaking.

Billy, evidently embarrassed, said nothing for a while, until his presence there began to irritate Bantwell, who cried sharply:—

"Well, what is it?"

Billy cleared his throat.

"Mr. Banwell," he replied at last, "could you let me have passes for two for the 'All for Love' company at the Spectacular theater for Christmas Eve?"

"Passes for two?" repeated Bantwell, shoving the shade over his eyes far up on his forehead, and gazing across the table at Billy.

"If you please."

"For two?" reiterated Banwell, with unnecessary emphasis on the last word.

Billy's eyes in some confusion sought the floor.

Banwell, the unmerciful, raised his eyes and shouted:—

"Oh, Jonesey, come here quick! Billy's gone wrong! He wants theatre tickets for two!"

Jonesey appeared from the next room and stood leaning against the door, looking in at Banwell and McGuffy. He was in his shirt-sleeves, lank and lean, with a corncob pipe, black with use, between his teeth. Jonesey was the criminal reporter, briefly known to the rest of the staff as "The Criminal."

What's the matter with our Billy? asked the Criminal, without removing his pipe.

"He wants tickets for two," explained Banwell. "That's unusual: one has sufficed up to date. That means a girl, Jonesey."

"Oh, I wouldn't go so far as to say that, Banwell. Perhaps Billy wants to take his mother to the theatre. Let's see what Billy has to say for himself before we pass judgment. Who is she, Billy? But remember, you are not bound to incriminate yourself."

Billy was blushing like a girl himself. He looked appealingly from one of his tormentors to the other. He would have fled, but he knew he could not escape, for Jonesey stood in the doorway.

"Banwell," continued Jonesey imperturbably, "I fear that heightened color in Billy's face gives him away rather. We must prepare for the worst. Now, if my frightful example has no effect upon him, perhaps he is not too far gone to scorn my good advice. Billy, I have one wife and six children. That's the awful example. My advice is that it's just as easy and as pleasant to fall in love with a millionaire's daughter as with a shop girl. I consider I have lost at least $200,000 by not knowing that when I was young, and I have never been able, somehow, to make it up working on a newspaper. Billy, be warned in time."

"Look here," cried Billy, anger at last coming to his rescue, "if I'm not to get the tickets, say so."

"Oh, you can get the tickets, Billy, unless they're all gone, and if they are I will give you a letter to the box-office. Let's see—Christmas Eve, that's the 24th this year, isn't it?"

Banwell pulled open a drawer and took out a handful of long pasteboard tickets with the corners clipped off, and selecting two flung them over to Billy, who put them in his vest pocket, murmuring his thanks.

Jonesey stretched his arms across the doorway, saying, "Billy, my son, pause and reflect."

But Billy, crying, "Oh, you go to the deuce!" dodged under and escaped.

Both men laughed and Jonesey went back to his own room.

Billy made his way out of the Argus office into the street. The night was cold and the pavement crisp with frost. It was not snowing exactly, but flakes here and there filtered through the electric light and fluttered down on the street. Billy walked briskly for a block or two and glanced up at a tall building that rose from a corner. The bulk of the building was dark, with an isolated window lighted here and there, but the whole of the upper story was ablaze with electric lamps. As Billy looked up he could see against the sky apparently all the wires of the city, from every direction, concentrating on the roof of this tall building. He entered and walked down the dimly lighted hall to the elevator standing at the end of the passage, waiting, for there were few upward travellers at that hour. The night boy evidently knew where Billy was going, for he winked and without a word pulled the wire rope, shooting the elevator to the top story, where Billy got out.

The young reporter went up still another flight of steps and paused at an open door, looking into a great, brilliantly lighted room. Facing the walls, on high stools, sat some dozens of girls, apparently playing games with pegs on a continuous brass checker board that extended like a yellow dado around the room. Their voices reached Billy as he stood by the door. "Hello!" "Did you get them?" "What number did you say?" "Six-naught-four?" "Are you through talking?" "I'm afraid there's no one there." "Ring off when you've finished," and such like phrases formed the babel caused by the girls' voices. The girls had small, round discs fastened to their ears, and each heard only what was intended for her to hear. Each had hands free to place the pegs or ring up a subscriber. It was the telephone exchange.

Perhaps it was the free magnetism of electricity in the place; perhaps it was Billy's earnest hypnotic gaze concentrated on one girl that made her turn her head, seemingly without cause, and glance toward the door. Billy nodded, and she, calling an assistant to take her place, slipped gracefully down from the tall stool and went quickly out into the hall.

"Hello, Billy," she said cordially, "What's up?"

"I am," answered Billy, flippantly, "up about fifteen flights of stairs."

"The elevator hasn't stopped yet, has it?"

"Oh, no; I caught the elevator all right. But I had to climb the last flight. I just dropped in to let you know I got the theatre tickets all right."

"Good for you," cried the girl. "Gallery?"

"Gallery?" said Bill, with great contempt. "Not likely! Best seats in the house—three rows from the front—end seats in the row;" and, to prove his amazing contention, Billy produced the tickets from his pocket and exhibited them. The telephone girl took them to look at, and asked many questions. Why were the corners clipped off, she wanted to know. That was so they would not be counted as cash when the receipts were made up, Billy explained. Suddenly something on the tickets caught the girl's attention, and stopped her talk.

"Why, Billy," she said after a pause, "these tickets are for the twenty-fourth."

"Of course—Christmas Eve. That's all right, isn't it?"

"Aren't they good for any other night?"

"I guess not. Can't you go that night?"

It was evident that Billy's telephone girl had a temper of her own. She threw the tickets on the floor and stamped her foot angrily. Billy meekly picked up the bits of pasteboard.

"Of course I can't go. I'm on duty Christmas Eve. Why didn't you telephone to me and ask what night I could go? You knew I was at the end of the wire, and you would have done it if you had cared anything for me."

"Look here, Sadie," protested Billy, "I can't talk to you over the wire. The fellows in the local room can hear everything I say, and that brute Jonesey guys me enough already. But it doesn't matter. I can get the tickets changed."

"You don't need to bother changing them for me. I guess you wanted to take some other girl anyhow."

"I shouldn't wonder," said Billy, exasperated at this unreasonableness of women. "But there's lots of girls would be glad to go."

"All right," said Sadie, with decision. "Invite 'em to go, then; and look here, Billy McGuffy, don't you ever come to see me again."

Sadie turned with dignity and left Billy standing there. The quarrel had come on him so suddenly that he hardly realized it was all over. Knowing that he dared not follow her into the busy telephone exchange to explain things, and not being quite sure what there was to explain, he concluded to think over the crisis and see if there was a way out. He walked slowly down the numerous flights of stairs and went out into the keen air. Instinctively his steps turned toward the Argus office. The local paper room was empty, all the boys being out at that hour attending to their duties at various parts of the city. Billy knew that he ought to be out as well, but he sat in his chair with his head in his hands. The bottom had unexpectedly dropped out of the universe, and even Billy's allegiance to his paper wavered under the shock of the catastrophe. For fully five minutes Billy did not care whether the opposition sheet scored a triumph over him or not. Things are pretty black when it comes to this with a reporter. At last he rose, went to the telephone, and rang the bell.

"Hello, Sadie," he said, "may I speak with you a moment?"

"What number, please?" came the sweet unrelenting voice of Sadie."

"I do not want any number; I want you, Sadie."

"If you don't want a number, what did you ring for? This is the telephone exchange. If you don't want anything I'll turn you off."

"You've turned me off already, Sadie; and I do want something, I want to know what night you can go with me to the theatre."

"Look here, Mr. McGuff—I suppose that's who it is talking—I won't go to the theatre any night with you. Take the other girl you were bragging about."

Before Billy could say anything more he heard the ominous click that "turned him off." He had done all he could, so, with a sigh, he buttoned his overcoat about him and went to his work.

When he came back at eleven the local rooms were full of men busily writing. The city editor was at his table, with the green shade over his eyes. Billy placed two tickets on the table before him, and said somewhat huskily:—

"I'm much obliged, Mr. Banwell, for the tickets, but I've changed my mind, and perhaps, some of the others would like to go that night."

"What!" cried Banwell. "Wouldn't she go, or is she going with another fellow?" Then glancing up and seeing the look of pain on Billy's face, Banwell, who was a kindly man, added, "That's all right, Billy. Any other night, you know."

"I'll—I'll remain on duty Christmas Eve, if you don't mind," said Billy.

"Good for you," cried Banwell, enthusiastically, to cover Billy's evident confusion. "We're short-handed that night, and Jonesey wants to get off, of course. That's what it is to be a family man. Billy, you're a brick."

The editor reached up for his assignment book and wrote down the fact that McGuffy would be on deck Christmas Eve.

At half-past nine on Christmas Eve Billy entered the Argus office. There was no apparent reason why he should be there, and there were many reasons why at that moment he should have been on his own beat. He looked quickly around the rooms and satisfied himself that they were empty. Then he hastily rang the telephone bell.

"Sadie," he whispered into the tube.

"Well?" came the answer.

"I just wanted you to know, Sadie, that I am on duty to-night."

"Oh, is that you, Billy? I thought you was in the end seat, third row—or was it the fourth?"

Billy thought he heard something like a curious combination between a sob and a laugh—one can never tell exactly what sound it is that comes over a telephone wire; electricity plays such tricks with its customers.

"Sadie, may I call you up as soon as it strikes 12, and wish you a merry Christmas?"

"Billy." There was a long pause, then the whisper, with something of a banter, continued. "Anybody can call up anybody else on a telephone, you know. Good night."

Sadie sat at her work as the night went on, and now and then glanced at the little watch which formed part of the bracelet surrounding her dainty wrist. Midnight came, but there was no ring from Billy. There came many calls from people who wished "Merry Christmas," over the wires, and Sadie listened to them and wondered why hers did not come. She sighed, and told herself that she did not deserve the greeting, for she yearned for Billy and wanted to tell him how sorry she was; but of course, she could not make the first move, and merely because she had been in the wrong, Billy would have to smooth the way with extra deftness. It was nice of him to telephone to her when the play was going on so that she might be sure he was not sitting there with another girl, whose company, after all, he would have been perfectly justified in seeking, considering the way he had been treated.

For half an hour after midnight Sadie was kept busy, then the calls almost ceased. It was nearly 1 when a sharp ring came in. No, it was not Billy's voice.

"Give me one-nought-six-four, quick!"

Now, it invariably irritates a telephone girl to be told to be quick. She is always quick. It is worse than swearing, for when a man swears over the wires, the girl may shut him off and report him. The "quick" aroused Miss Sadie's temper, but she said nothing; 1064 was the number of the Blade editorial rooms, and Sadie knew that the Blade was the rival of Billy's paper, the Argus. Sadie always called the Argus Billy's paper, although, as a matter of fact, it belonged to a company.

"Hello! Is this the Blade editorial rooms? Is Barker there? Well, ask him to step to the 'phone will you, please? Tell him to hurry up. It's Stokes."

There was a pause. Then Sadie heard Barker's heavy step, and finally his "Hello! that you, Stokes? This is Barker."

"See here, Barker, there's the biggest thing on to-night, and we've got the dead-wood on the Argus if we work it right. There's been a Christmas eve jamboree in the Italian quarter, at 768 Brenner street. Fellow named Mileni—M-i-l-e-n-i, got that? pulled a knife. Two men are dead and one's so bad he'll die before morning. A woman brained Mileni with a chair."

"Who's on that beat for the Argus?" cried Barker, breathlessly.

"Oh, I've fixed that all right. Billy McGuffy is the Argus man, and he's as green as they make 'em. I had a fellow with a buggy call for Billy, and tell him a cock-and-bull story about a frightful railway accident out at Bloomfield, three miles beyond the city limits. Billy's gone with him and won't be home until morning. Billy thinks he's going to make his eternal reputation on that railroad disaster. Now, if you've got your pencil sharpened, I'll give you full particulars of the Mileni murder."

Stokes talked and Barker took it all down, punctuating the narration with "Yes," now and then. Sadie, with the telephone receivers over her ears, listened, and also took it down on the fly-leaf of a book she had been reading. Her lips were set in a firm line as she thought of poor Billy on his wild-goose chase through the bitter night. That, then, was why he had not telephoned to her. At last Stokes finished his account of the tragedy.

Sadie had made up her mind what to do, although she knew it was wrong, and that she would lose her place if she was found out. But she thought of Billy and not of her position. She knew the value of time on a morning paper, for she had been on the newspaper wires for some months. There was no use in waiting till Billy called her up, it would be too late then, so she put in the plug that communicated with the Argus office and rang the bell. When the "hello" came she asked who was there.

"Banwell, the city editor. Who's that talking?"

"This is Billy—Billy McGuffy."

"Hello, Billy, what's the matter with you? Where have you been all the night?"

"Say, Banwell, there's been a frightful tragedy up here—No. 768 Brenner street—got that down?"

"Yes. Hurry it along. Billy, I can tell by your voice you're scared; you talk like a girl."

"That's all right. It would scare anybody. There's two men dead and another on the way."

"Heavens and earth! Wait a second, Billy, till I whistle up the foreman to save us a couple of columns."

There was a pause of a few seconds, then Banwell's voice again: "Now, Billy, whoop her up."

Sadie gave full particulars and then added: "You'd better send a man up to Brenner street as soon as you can. I'm done out and am going home."

"Hold on," cried Banwell. "Hold on, Billy. Where are you!"

But the telephone had now been rung off and Banwell's question was unswered.

Sadie sat back and looked at herself in the little bit of glass she kept by her. "Well, I don't care," she said to herself. "I've done it, and I'm not the least sorry, though I suppose I'd ought to be." The face that looked back at her was rather pale, and in spite of her defiant assertion to herself, she felt just a little afraid, for she knew that she had broken the most stringent rule of the company's code.

About 4 o'clock in the morning a call came. It was from the Argus office and Sadie's answer had a tremble in it.

"Hello!" said the voice. "Is that you, Sadie? A Merry Christmas. I'm a little later than I expected to be."

"You are, Billy," replied the girl. "How is everything out at Bloomfield?"

"Gracious! How did you know I was at Bloomfield? I've just got back and came to this office and to the telephone the first thing."

"That was a bad railroad accident they had out there, wasn't it, Billy?"

"Great heavens! Sadie, you're a witch. How in thunder did—"

"Billy, you musn't use language like that to the central. I'll report you if you do. Oh, I forgot. The same to you, Billy. Is Mr. Banwell there?"

"No; they've all gone home and I can hear the presses in the basement running off the paper. Sadie, may I go over there?"

"No, Billy; not just now. I'll be free at 6 o'clock, then you may come over and see me home. You draw up a chair near the 'phone and go to sleep, like a good boy. At 6 o'clock I'll ring you up as if the house was on fire. I'll wait for you at the door downstairs. Remember, I must see you before you meet Banwell or any of the rest."

"All right," said Billy.

He drew up a chair and threw himself into it. It seemed to him that he had hardly seated himself when he was awakened by a long ring of the telephone bell at 6. He stumbled downstairs, trying to button up his overcoat and rub his eyes open at the same time. Downstairs the watchman handed him a copy of the paper damp from the press. The morning was crisp and clear, and the street was strangely silent. Billy glanced at the first page, and instantly his eyes opened wider than they had done for all his rubbing. He read the startling headlines:—

FRIGHTFUL CHRISTMAS TRAGEDY.
Drink, Anger, and a Knife Work Fearful Havoc in Brenner Street.
TWO MEN INSTANTLY KILLED AND A THIRD DIES THIS MORNING.

"Oh, dear! Oh, dear! Oh, dear!" wailed Billy. "I'm a goner this time sure. I knew it would come some day. Right in the middle of my district, too! and me fooling around the suburbs—jackass that I am. I wonder who got it, and Banwell so short-handed. Well, it's all up with Bill McGuffy. I'll not wait to be fired, I'll send in my resignation before noon."

He jammed the paper into his overcoat pocket and hurried along the frosty pavement to the telephone exchange building, where he found Sadie standing at the door waiting for him. She looked so pretty in the clear morning air, with her natty fur-bordered cloak around her, that Billy almost forgot his trouble as he gazed admiringly at her. She was the first to speak.

"Oh, Billy," she cried, coming rapidly towards him, "I've done the most dreadful thing!"

"So have I," said Billy.

"But I'll lose my situation, if I'm found out."

"I'm found out now," replied Billy, with a sigh, "and my situation's as good as gone already. But tell me about your trouble first."

And Sadie told him as they walked up the deserted avenue.

Billy, being innocent and young at that time, had never suspected that he had been sent beyond the city limits by the villians of the opposition press until Sadie finished her story. The man in the buggy had been so sorry he had been misinformed, and he had been kind enough to take Billy back to the very door of the Argus office at 4 o'clock in the morning.

"Yes, Billy," admitted Sadie, when Billy accused himself of being a fool (they were standing in the porch of the house where the young woman lived, and she was trying to find her pocket and the latch key). "Yes, Billy, you are green. You never know enough to do the right thing at the right moment."

"Oh, don't I!" said Billy; whereupon, to her infinite surprise, he kissed her as she stood there.

"Oh, Billy," she cried, catching her breath, "I didn't think that you had the courage."

All of which goes to show that a young man on a daily paper learns many things as time goes on, which thought passed through Billy's mind as he modestly and silently listened to Mr. Banwell's compliments that afternoon on his enterprise and wide-awakeness of the night before.—Luke Sharp, in Detroit Free Press.

SOME PARKHURST EPIGRAMS.

Rev. Charles H. Parkhurst, D. D., in his initial paper for young men, in the February issue of The Ladies' Home Journal, gives brilliant emphasis to his text, "The Stuff that Makes Young Manhood," by the frequent employment of forcible epigrams. He considers a proper "getting ready" as the greatest value in preparing for life's work, and upon this point flashes his strongest, brightest lights in brilliant radiance.

Putting a buttercup to school will not graduate it a butterfly even if it is a very good school. Its only wholesome ambition will be to be as good as it can as a buttercup.

I have watched a good many brooding hens, but I never saw one facilitate the hatching process by picking the shell. The chick on the inside will get out if he is worth it.

More men are injured by having things made easy for them than by having their paths beset with difficulties, for it encourages them to stay themselves on circumstances, whereas their supreme reliance needs to be on their own personal stuff.

Young men are continually worrying lest they be failures and nonentities.

Every man will count for what he is worth.

There is as much a science of success as there is a science of hydraulics.

The less a young man talks about luck and untowardness of circumstances, and the coquettishness of popular favor, and the like, the better for him and for the world to which he owes himself. Every man will have all the powers he earns, and the power that he has will tell, not because people like it or like him, but because it is power.

Personal pressure can no more be hooted down, or voted down, or argued out of existance than can the push of the wind or the pull of the moon. If you weigh a ton you will exert a ton's pressure.

There is probably such a thing as genius, alhough ninety-nine hundredths of it is doubtless the name which lazy people give to results which others have earned by hard work in those hours when the lazy people themselves were either sleeping or wishing they could gain it without toiling for it.

There is faculty enough in almost anybody to become genius if only all that faculty were lumped.

We are more likely to find a good destiny by going afoot than riding.

The world cares very little for experts, and the course of events is only infinitesimally determined by them.

The man whose entire capital is one of enthusiasm will be conspicuous for his abundance of torch, at the same time lacking the timber which the torch exists primarily to enkindle.

Sowing still antedates reaping, and the amount sowed determines pretty closely the size of the harvest.

Empty barns in October are the logical sequence of empty furrows in spring. The young man may as well understand that there are no gratuities in this life, and that success is never reached "across lots."

Taking It For Granted.

He (confidently)—"By Jove! I can tell you, the woman who could make a fool o' me isn't living."

FRIDAY EVENING, FEBRUARY 7, 1896.

DISTRICT ATTORNEY GARDNER SCORED

For Alleged Neglect to Prosecute Illegal Liquor Dealers.

Col. John L. Rice of Springfield, ex-city marshal, in an address before a temperance gathering in that city Monday afternoon made some rather strong charges against District Attorney Gardner, of Palmer, for failure to prosecute illegal liquor cases.

In speaking of the criminal laws Col. Rice said that there were three stages in the administration of justice: The first was that of detecting and apprehending offenders, and the bringing of them to the tribunals with the evidence concerning the same; second, the determination of the guilt or innocence of the party so brought, and the meting out of punishment if guilty; third, the execution of the penalty provided for by the jails, etc. Regarding the complaints frequently made because justice was not meted out to evil doers, he gave several reasons why convictions were not always reached, and in connection with the second stage claimed that one of the defects lay in the office of the district attorney, saying that it had grown up to be a custom to decide, quasi-judicially, whether to continue a case or not.

"A great number of cases," he said, "particularly liquor cases, are never brought to trial. If the district attorney doesn't choose to bring the case to trial it is finally nolle prossed or filled away."

Referring to a case against some liquor dealers who had spirited away witnesses against them in a case brought by himself, Col. Rice said: "The men were found and indicted for obstructing public justice, and were bound over to the superior court. When the session began to draw near to the close I importuned the district attorney and made myself more or less of a nuisance in the endeavor to get the case to trial. The case came and dragged on for nearly a whole day, and the court adjourned without motion for a sentence, and none were ever sentenced. The next year these same liquor dealers got licenses, the district attorney got reëlected, and the police were loudly blamed because laws were not properly enforced. The only thing that these liquor dealers fear is a jail sentence. The maximum penalty for a liquor sentence is $500, but it is not within the memory of living man when such a sentence was imposed."

He spoke of the town of Hampden, where the town had voted no-license, but liquor continued to be sold. "The selectmen and constables refused to do anything, and a self-appointed committee took it up. They were marked men from that time, and were pursued by the liquor element. When suits were brought two of the selectmen who had refused to do anything came into court and swore that the reputation for truth and veracity of the men who had worked up the cases against these liquor sellers was not good. It was difficult to get any one after that to procure evidence against these illegal sellers; so two deputy sheriffs from Palmer were secured who found liquor at two places complained of. Suits were promptly brought, illegally, against the man that called the deputies, and the man who brought the suits is the district attorney."

Someone asked if this was C. L. Gardner of Palmer, and received an affirmative reply.

"When the cases for illegal selling came to trial in the police court they were found guilty and were promptly appealed, but the district attorney refused to try them. Were the public attention called to the doings of the courts and to the district attorneys, there would be prompt improvement."

Regarding these statements District Attorney Gardner says, regarding the Hampden cases, that he cannot speak definitely for the Springfield police court, and only knows that some cases were tried there against parties in Hampden, the defendants, according to his recollection, paying fines of $100 each. "Under the law a man may be prosecuted for a sale and upon the same evidence with intent to sell, and again if the sale was in a building, for keeping a common nuisance. The purpose of these prosecutions as I apprehend is two-fold: First, to punish the offender, and second, if possible to drive him out of the business, both usually regarded as very important objects to be gained. It has been found that the most effective way to accomplish these objects is to convict and punish in a single case, and to postpone sentence in one or more of the remaining cases, making the final disposition depend somewhat upon whether the defendant actually discontinues the business.

"In these particular cases, according to my recollection, each defendant who was convicted, paid the usual fine in the first case, and no appeal was taken. Subsequently the prosecution of a second case against each defendant was commenced, based upon the same evidence which had secured their conviction in the first cases in the police court. The defendants appealed from the second conviction, and these were the cases with which I had to deal in the superior court. The cases were not prosecuted by the town authorities, but by one or more individuals, who under the law, by reason of the failure of certain officers of the town to prosecute, would be entitled to all fines imposed. Before the cases were reached, I received petitions from the board of selectmen, one of whom at least I knew to be a consistent temperance man, representing that in their opinion the prosecutions were malicious and that justice did not require that the defendants should be further punished.

"Upon careful inquiry I was informed from reliable sources that these petitions represented the general sentiment of that community, and that the defendants were entirely out of the business, the one against whom the most serious complaint was made having permanently left town. Upon these representations, which were submitted by me to the court, it was ordered that the cases be placed on file, the law as it now exists not permitting the district attorney to file or otherwise dispose of a case except by trial, without an order from the court, and I may say that I have never nolle prossed a liquor case and have never filed one away except in conformity with this law. The deputies who went from Palmer to serve papers in these cases understood, as they afterward informed me, that the man who engaged their services was an agent of the town, acting in its behalf. Their legal fees were a very small compensation for the services rendered, but the town authorities refused to pay their bill, and they were not successful in their attempt to secure their payment by the persons who employed them. Several weeks after the services were rendered a clerk in my office, as it now seems, at the request of the officers, made and delivered them writs to be used in an attempt to collect their fees."

Mr. Gardner stated that previous to Tuesday morning he had no knowledge that these writs had been made by any person in his office.

"I have never refused or failed to try a liquor case, whether the evidence seemed sufficient or otherwise, when the officer having the case in charge expressed a desire to have it tried, and I have done the best I could in all such cases to secure a conviction. I have no sympathy with violators of the liquor law, and so far as I know no previous complaint has ever been made against me by reason of my failure to try them."

The report of Col. Rice's address appeared in the daily papers of Tuesday, and Mr. Gardner's statements in Wednesday's papers. In a signed article in yesterday's Republican Col. Rice insists that he is right, and cites 14 appealed liquor cases from Springfield which he says went upon the superior court docket in 1893 and have never been tried, to prove his claim. At the close of his article he says, however, "I concur most heartily with Mr. Gardner's statement that he is not in sympathy with the illegal liquor traffic. No one who knows him can doubt that. I said as much at the meeting on Monday. I said also, and I repeat it now, that in my view the explanation of all this is that he fell without sufficient thought into an evil practice which he found in vogue when he came into his office."

UNIVERSALISTS WILL CELEBRATE.

The Twentieth Anniversary of Their First Regular Preaching Services Next Thursday.

St. Paul's Universalist church will celebrate the twentieth anniversary of regular preaching services next Thursday evening at 7.30. A committee consisting of F. J. Wassum, O. M. Graves, George Robinson, Rev. H. F. Moulton, Mrs. Walter Shaw and Mrs. John Helliwell has full charge of the arrangement of exercises. Invitations have been sent to former parishioners who are well known in town, and among the invited ones are M. W. French of Newtonville and A. H. Willis of Waban, who were among the leaders in the establishment of Universalism in this village; also Prof. W. R. Shipman, D. D., of Tufts College, who preached the first regular sermon Feb. 13, 1876, and Rev. A. J. Patterson, D. D, of Roxbury, who organized the church with 21 members May 28th, 1886, are expected to be present. All of the ex-pastors, including Rev. C. H. Eaton, D. D., of New York city, 1887-81, Rev. E. A. Perry of Cooperstown, N. Y., 1882-86, Rev. F. W. Betts of Syracuse, N. Y., 1886-87, Rev. J. F. Albion of Malden, 1890-91, have been requested to be present or send letters to be read during the evening. Judge George Robinson is to give a historical address, and several of the parishioners, O. M. Graves, F. J. Sedgwick, F. J. Wassum and others will give reminiscences of the days of beginnings. There will be a special programme of music. All interested are cordially invited to attend.

Previous to the first regular preaching service in Union Hall twenty years ago, the Universalists held occasional services in halls and at the residences of Universalist families. From the beginning the movement had the loyal support of such well-known citizens as the late C. C. Shaw, S. R. Lawrence, J. A. Squier and others. The church was built in 1879, and dedicated May 12, 1880. The parish was organized as early as May 9, 1875.

Rev. H. F. Moulton, the present pastor, will preach next Sunday morning an appropriate sermon on the theme, "From 1876 to 1896; some important changes in the theological thought and opinions within twenty years." In the evening his theme will be, "By our faith you know us."

Caught Peddling Liquor.

Officer Manning of Three Rivers and Deputy Sheriff Studley made a capture of 27 gallons of lager beer in 215 bottles at Three Rivers last Saturday afternoon about 2 o'clock. The stuff was found in a wagon driven by Vincent Steke and Willie Krejnicky of West Springfield, and was confiscated. Willie had been out the week before with a load and had such good luck in disposing of it that he came in the middle of the week and took orders for Saturday's delivery. He delivered his first lot all right, but the officers swooped down on him as he was carrying the second order into a house. A hearing on the charge of illegally keeping liquor with intent to sell will be heard in the district court to-morrow morning.

Move for a Clerk of the District Court.

A petition is in circulation asking the Legislature to pass a bill authorizing the appointment of a clerk for the district court of Eastern Hampden, at a salary of $500 per year. Besides the convenience which it would afford in the better facilities for procuring papers, it would make the local court a court of naturalization; as only courts which have clerks are naturalization courts, the local court is not now one, and applicants for naturalization from this section are now compelled to go to Springfield, oftentimes at no small inconvenience in the way of lost time, as well as expense.

In the Baptist church next Sunday the pastor will preach on "Hearing and doing."

Miss Jessie Griggs of Ivoryton, Ct., is spending the week with Mr. and Mrs. A. W. Thayer.

The monthly meeting of the Palmer Business and Social Club will be held next Tuesday evening.

There will be services in Palmer Center at the house of Mrs. Wright on Sunday at 3 p. m. These meetings are increasing in interest.

D. F. Holden has sold his machines for the manufacture of wire nails to the recently-formed trust, and gone out of the business.

The Quaboag Literary Circle will hold an adjourned meeting this evening, when Rev. F. E. Jenkins will read a paper on the life of Francis Bacon.

The teachers in the grammar school building were given a vacation from duty Monday for the purpose of visiting schools, and inspected those in Springfield.

The dancing class lesson will be on Thursday evening of next week, instead of Tuesday, as was announced, Mr. Holland being obliged to be elsewhere on Tuesday.

The Ladies' Social Union will have a supper in St. Paul's Universalist church next Thursday evening at 6.30. Mrs. Walter Shaw and Mrs. John Helliwell will entertain.

The regular monthly meeting of the W. C. T. U. will be held in the parlors of the Congregational church next Monday afternoon at 2 30 o'clock. State President Mrs. S. S. Fessenden is expected to be present, and a good attendance is desired.

A horse belonging to the Central Mass. Electric Company was attacked by a strange disease last Saturday, something resembling paralysis, and as the animal showed no signs of getting better it was shot on Sunday to put it out of misery.

Miss Anna Fisherdick, assistant teacher in the high school, has been granted a two-weeks' leave of absence on account of ill health, and Mrs. L. H. Brigham is hearing her classes. Miss Fisherdick has gone to Boston for a week or more of rest.

Rev. F. E. Jenkins was one of the speakers at the Sunday school convention in North Brookfield yesterday, his subject being "Normal work." Rev. C. R. Minard of the Baptist church also spoke on "The opportunities of the Sunday school superintendent."

There has been a little sleighing this week, on Wednesday, the snow of Tuesday having made a fair foundation for the runners. The thaw of Wednesday afternoon made many bare spots in the road however, and the rain of yesterday took off what was left.

Judging from the number of tickets already sold for the entertainment to be given next Friday evening in the opera house by the young people of St. Thomas' association, it will be a great success. The ladies of the choir will have charge of the refreshments. It is expected that many will come from the surrounding villages, while Monson, Ware and Springfield will be well represented.

Don't miss the musical event of the season next Monday night. The Canadian Jubilee Singers have been delighting the musical public both in Europe and America for 17 years. Castle and cot have been brightened by their wonderful harmonies, and no one can afford to let such an opportunity slip. Let the opera house be filled on Monday evening. Tickets on sale at Allen's drug store at popular prices.

The second of the farmers' institutes under the auspices of the Eastern Hampden Agricultural Society will be held in the district court room in this village next Tuesday, commencing at 10 a. m. The speaker will be O. S. Senter of Northampton, and the subject, "Our forests,—their relation to climate, to water supply, and to house and ship building,—how to increase and preserve them." Ladies are particularly invited to attend.

According to the old saying that if Candlemas Day be bright and fair more than half of the winter is to come, we are in for a long siege of cold weather yet, for Sunday, which was Candlemas Day, was as bright and fair as one could wish to see. Another old saw has it that the ground hog comes out of his hole on that day to see what the weather is like, and if he can see his shadow, returns for another sleep, knowing that much cold weather is to come.

A man with a desire to see what is going on in other people's houses has been annoying the residents of Park street and Converse avenue lately, as well as in other parts of the town. He is usually seen about 8 o'clock in the evening, and in one instance was found in the yard with his face close to the window of the parlor. He has been seen several times, and a good description of him obtained, so it is known pretty well who he is. He is quite likely to get into trouble if he keeps on in this line, as several have declared their intention to handle the fellow roughly if he is caught about their premises.

The high school scholars most agreeably surprised their friends with the quality of their entertainment in the opera house Tuesday evening. That there is no lack of talent among the high school pupils was apparent to all who heard the speakers that evening. In addition to instrumental music and recitations by the high school scholars, Mrs. Flynt of Palmer and Miss Jessie Griggs of Ivoryton, Ct., sang. It was a pity that Palmer people did not show a greater appreciation of the efforts made by the school to increase their library, and give them a larger audience.

There was something a little incongruous about the stage setting for the high school entertainment in the opera house Tuesday evening. The parlor scene was used, but evidently it was house cleaning time, for there was no carpet on the floor, and the two lone chairs at the opposite side of the stage from the piano seemed as if set as sentinels to keep watch that the instrument didn't get away. More judgment should also be used in the matter of lighting the house. The ceiling lights were not turned on until the programme was about to begin, then they were lighted through the evening, making it hard for those who sat in the galleries to see the stage distinctly.

E. W. Cleveland has taken the agency for a new book, "Darkness and Daylight in New York," by Helen Campbell, Col. Thomas W. Knox, Supt. Thomas Byrnes and Rev. Lyman Abbott. It is a story of personal experiences in rescue mission work in darkest New York, is superbly illustrated with 252 engravings from photographs taken from life expressly for the work, many of them by flash-light, and treats of numerous interesting and pathetic incidents and facts concerning the existence of a certain class of the great city's inhabitants, about which the majority of people know but little. The book is to be had by subscription only, and cannot be obtained at the book stores.

The newly-appointed judge of the probate court, Judge Long of Springfield, presided over his first session of the court on Wednesday in that city, and the first business transacted was action on the will of the late Judge Shurtleff, his predecessor. Other business transacted was: Administration granted in the estates of — Catherine D. Brewer, late of Springfield, Louis E. Brewer administrator; John Crowley, late of Monson, Dennis P. Nelligan administrator; Samuel E. Lee, late of Hampden, George D. Lee administratrix. An executor's inventory was filed in the estate of Caroline C. Harvey, late of Palmer. The administrator's account was filed in the estate of Margaret Fitzgerald, late of Monson, and the executor's account in the estate of Sophia B. Holmes, late of Monson. Affidavit of notice of appointment was filed in the estates of—Alvina B. Hubbard, late of Ludlow; Luther Markham, late of Wilbraham. A petition to sell and assign certain notes and claims in the estate of Austin E. Morse, late of Ludlow, was granted.

District Court.

These civil cases were entered last Saturday: A. H. Danforth of Monson against J. W. Lambert of Monson; E. A. Buck, et al against E. N. Hale, et al; E. A. Buck & Co., et al against J. C. Maguire of Monson; Louis Woehning of New York against the Rogers-Osgood Hat Co.; Orillus W. Studley against A. H. Ballard of Hampden; H. A. Northrop against A. H. Ballard. The two latter suits are the results of the recent raids in Hampden. Mr. Ballard came to Palmer and engaged the officers to go to Hampden and make the raids, stating that he would see that they were paid. The bill for services rendered was forwarded, and word came back that the selectmen refused to pay it, that they had not hired the officers, and so declined to pay the charges. It turned out that Mr. Ballard had been acting in a private capacity, and not as a town official, and as payment has been long delayed the suits have been brought.

In the criminal court on Saturday John Linnehan paid $5 for drunkennesss.

On Monday Joseph Copins and Joseph Nisky, for disturbing the peace at Bondsville paid fines of $1 and $5. Sidney Kelson was sent to the state farm at Bridgewater for one year for drunkenness. "Sid" was on probation for a former lapse from sobriety, and appeared in court on Saturday to prove his continuance in the right way; but soon after leaving the court he received a check for his pension,—one which he has been trying several years for having finally been granted,—and the acquisition of so much wealth at one time was too much, and he proceeded to load up. He said he bought some clothes, but that the bulk of his money had been stolen from him.

A Plea for Good Sense and Forbearance.

Editor of the Journal:—Will you kindly permit me a few words at this time so critical in the affairs of our town? I want to appeal to every citizen to be loyal to the best interests of the town and to let no prejudice and no action of others blind him as to his own duty. With all differences of creeds, we must live together on some terms—shall they be of peace or of war? I plead for peace.

Every measure in the advancement of this town must be carried by the combined votes of good Catholics and good Protestants—any sensible man can see that who informs himself on the make-up of our voting list. Our schools and our library must have the support of both if they are to be at their best. No-license—the most important improvement now pressing in Palmer—must be carried by the vote of both, if carried at all. The saloon men saw this long since and I have several times run across their efforts to foment discord. They are basing all their hopes of success this year on aroused religious prejudices, and they will arouse these, if they can.

I appeal most earnestly to every Protestant to be broad-minded and fair, not to be ruled by prejudice and not to test a man and his work by his church connection. This principle of action is a part of the very essence of true Protestatism.

I appeal to every Catholic, for the sake of the common interests of our homes, our children and of our town, not to be led by anything to action in town matters that will bring harm to us all. The saloons are bringing awful ruin to many of our young men and terrible sorrow to many of our homes, both Catholic and Protestant.

The sentiment of this town is now strongly against the saloons. Our only danger lies in religious prejudice which may lead some to vote contrary to their convictions. The saloon men know this, and they will make the most of it by all means, fair or foul. I plead with every good man to use fairness and good sense, and not to be trapped by any device and prevented from acting according to his intelligence and conscience.

I am, for fairness and good sense,

Yours sincerely,

FRANK E. JENKINS.

The Dancing Class Reception.

The event of the season was the reception given last Friday evening by Prof. Treadway's dancing class, the occasion being an unusual success, far surpassing the most sanguine hopes of its projectors. There was a large attendance of dancers, and the gallery was crowded with spectators. A feature not down on the programme was the presentation by the male members of the class of a gold-headed cane to Prof. Treadway, which came in the nature of a thorough surprise. A concert was first given by Ashley's orchestra of Westboro, which rendered excellent music. After the concert came the grand march, which was led by C. L. LEGISLATIVE MATTERS.

BOSTON, Feb. 5, 1896.

The woman suffragists have at last put in their first appearance for the session. They have presented two petitions. They come from the Massachusetts Woman Suffrage Association, and one of them asks for the right to vote for presidential electors, while the other is for municipal suffrage, the same as has been requested for the last half dozen years or more. They feel happy over one thing, they will have two opportunities of being heard. The petition for general suffrage must go to the committee on constitutional amendments, while the petition for municipal suffrage will entitle them to a hearing before the committee on election laws. So, if the Legislature thought to save time and annoyance by referring the question to the people, it looks as if they were mistaken. The women are as sharp as they are. The suffragists say that they are much encouraged by the vote last fall, for it shows that they have a good many more friends in the state than they thought they had. There will be opportunities to make arguments before two committees and to have debates in the House and Senate upon two distinct propositions, whereas they had only one chance before.

A petition has been presented for a return to the old system of aldermanic districts in Boston, doing away with the present system of aldermen-at-large with minority representation, so that the minority party is sure of at least five of the twelve aldermen. Boston has vibrated back and forth several times with her aldermanic system. Not many years ago there was elections at large, by which the Democrats used to carry the entire board. Then the Legislature substituted the district system with the consequence that there was so much log-rolling and ward politics that the system at large was substituted once more, but with the provision for minority representation, so that the Democrats should not have the entire board. But this system works badly, for it permits the present members to manipulate politics so that they seem able to keep themselves in power indefinitely. Hence this effort to return to the district system. The movement is made by Senator Hutchinson of Suffolk, the chairman of the Boston Republican ward and city committee.

The last hearing on biennial elections occurred Thursday forenoon. The committee went at once into executive session and reported in favor of the resolve. All of the three Democrats dissented. In the House on Friday the amendment was assigned to Tuesday, February 4, with the understanding that there should be debate on both stages of the resolve. It was admitted by Mr. J. H. Mellen of Worcester on the floor that it was likely, or possible, that the friends of the amendment would succeed this time.

Senator Hutchinson of Suffolk has put in an order for a general investigation of the penal, reformatory and charitable institutions of the state. But there seems to be no serious reason to suppose that such an investigation will be held, or that there is any reason for having one. It is said that the order was introduced in consequence of the course of Senator Maccabe of Suffolk in challenging the passage of the general appropriations, including these for these institutions. Now, these bills are reported in the regular progress of proceedings. They are routine matters. There was no reason to suppose that there was anything wrong with the amounts of money appropriated, and Senator Maccabe's questions did not bring out anything wrong. But, after all, it has probably done no harm to have the matter stirred up. It is well for the people to know how their money is spent and to look after their appropriations. So, though some of the dignetaries may feel that their honesty or capacity has been impugned by this inquiry into their conduct, still, under a popular government, it is much better to err on the side of over caution than of neglect. But Senator Hutchinson, supposedly feeling that the administration of the state's institutions had been smirched, offered his order so that an investigation might show the public that everything is all right. But, as no charges of corruption or incompetence have been made, and as the discussion in the Senate has brought out nothing against the administration, it is not likely that anything will be done. If charges of wrong-doing were made, it would be a different matter, altogether. Then there would be an investigation in short order if the charges were made by reputable persons for the good of the state.

There has also been referred to the committee on constitutional amendments a petition from members of last year's Senate and House, some of whom are reëlected, for the election of the legislative presiding officers by the people. The proposition has support in the Senate. President Lawrence spoke for it last year. Senator Irwin is on the petition. Senator Cook of Worcester was one of the petitioners last year. Senator Wellman is in favor of it. This will, at least, insure its being well debated in the Senate. Three of last year's House who signed the petition are reëlected this year.

The biennial amendment came up by special assignment on Tuesday afternoon, but no sooner was it called than a skirmish began over the limitation of debate. It was finally limited to a little over an hour (by the time they were ready to vote) and then Mr. J. P. Mellen of Worcester got the floor and made a point of order that the resolves were not properly put before the House, that they had been so hastily reported by the committee that they were materially out of order. Speaker Meyer overruled the point, but Mellen persuaded the House, after that, the amendment was not in the right form that it was recommitted on motion of Mr. Bates of Boston, one of the Republican leaders of the House. NEIGHBORHOOD NOTES.

MONSON.

DEATH OF PROF. MORSE.

Instructor in Latin and Greek in Monson Academy.

The community was much saddened Monday morning to learn of the death of Walter E Morse at his home at Hammond Hall, the dormitory of Monson Academy, of which he had been in charge since the beginning of the school year. Mr. Morse had not been in his usual health since about the first of October, apparently having a cold. On January 9th he was attacked by the grippe, and although he was confined to his bed, no alarming symptoms were noticed for several days. Early in the third week of his illness, however, his condition became critical, and an examination revealed the fact that he had acute tuberculosis. For three or four days previous to his death he seemed more comfortable, and hopes were entertained that he might rally and his life be prolonged for a season. The end came suddenly, however, at 9:30 Monday morning, and was due probably to heart failure. The news of his death was soon announced to Principal Burke, but was not made known to the school until the close of the morning session. While the news was not wholly unexpected, it came at last as a great shock to the school, and the silent expressions of sorrow were very manifest. The sympathy for Mrs. Morse is universal.

Walter Everard Morse was born at Livermore Falls, Me., October 18, 1866. He attended school in his native place and prepared for college at the Maine Conference Seminary, Kent's Hill. In September, 1886, he entered Wesleyan University, where he was graduated in June, 1890. He was an honored member of the Phi Nu Theta fraternity, and at graduation he was elected to Phi Beta Kappa, a society which is based on scholarship and admits only the first fourth of each class. He was also one of ten to receive a commencement appointment. Since graduation he has been permanent secretary of his class, and it was his delight as well as his duty to correspond regularly with his classmates and report to the college paper. In the fall of '90 he took a position as principal of the Shrewsbury high school near Worcester, where he remained one year. From there he went to Gildersleeve, Ct., where he took a similar position. After two years he resigned to become instructor in Latin and Greek in Monson Academy. Mr. Morse was a superior teacher. He had the instincts of a scholar, and all his work was characterized by earnestness and thoroughness. The classical department of the school was greatly strengthened by his work, and the two classes whom he helped prepare for college found themselves well prepared for these institutions. He was held in high respect by all members of the school, especially by those who were most under his instruction. His relations with the other teachers were especially pleasant and helpful. For nine years he has been a close friend of Principal Burke, during three of these as a society brother in college, and for over two as a coworker in the Academy.

Mr. Morse was a member of the Methodist church in Monson, and a teacher in the Sunday school. At one time he was president of the Christian Endeavor Society. In politics he was independent, though he favored the Republican party. In the summer of 1892 he married Miss Fannie French of South Chesterfield, Me., whose aquaintance he made while both were students at Kents Hill. A son, Edwin French Morse, was born last October. Mr. Morse is also survived by his father and mother, two sisters and a brother.

The funeral took place Wednesday afternoon in the Academy chapel, preceeded by a prayer at the house. The casket was borne into the chapel by Drs. N. W. Rand and P. W. Soule, Principal A. N. Burke, Prof. Cooper of Wesleyan Academy, C. A. Bradway and H. W. Cristy, and placed directly in front of the platform, which was outlined with potted plants and cut flowers. Prof. Morse's chair, which he occupied for the last time just four weeks ago that day, was decorated with smilax and flowers, and about the casket were grouped a profusion of flowers sent by loving friends, among them a large bunch of white roses and a basket of violets from the school, lilies of the valley from the teachers, white roses from the Current Events Club of which Mrs. Morse is a member, and Easter lilies from a group of friends. The pupils of the school were seated in a body in the front, the teachers on one side and the class of '95 on the other side of the room. The class of '95 included G. W. Brown of Yale, C. M. Blair of Amherst, and F. A. Morris of Williston. Principal Newhall of Wesleyan Academy read from the Scriptures, and Mrs. A. D. Norcross sang "Lead, kindly light." In the unavoidable absence of Prof. Rice of Wesleyan University, who had been expected to give the memorial address, Rev. F. S. Hatch spoke as follows:

Four weeks ago this very day our friend and teacher occupied upon this platform the chair now vacant. He rose to join his voice with yours in praise to God; he listened to the words of Jesus; he bowed with you in prayer, repeating reverently in concert the prayer our Lord taught His disciples. Then with his associates, he entered upon the tasks and duties of his last day of work with you.

Now we gather in these walls, within which his work among us was wrought, that with high and holy cheer we may catch some inspiration for the future by a glance at his honorable and useful past. Pupils and friends can do him no higher honor than to use the lessons of his life for the larger perfection and usefulness of their own.

It would be most delightful to search out the hidden springs of Mr. Morse's life. If one could do it thoroughly how marvelous and fascinating such exploration would be. I can faintly imagine his delight in beholding the true origin of man; going down to the roots of things in ancestry and environment, tracing out all the tiniest roots and rootlets that lay hold on fit elements and bring them up into the bloom and fruitage of a symmetrical life.

But these things we cannot do in entirety. Indeed, we can scarcely do them at all, beyond the mere exteriors of life and time.

We see our friend a boy in a Christian home on a Maine farm, and moving ere long to the village. We can trace his early studies, and his work in his father's company. Now he is entering the Academy,—ambitious, self-sacrificing, toilful, scholarly. Here he is becoming acquainted with one who in all future years—and beyond—is to lay her hands upon the chords of his being and call out all its sweetest harmonies; and here, too, in very boyhood, he is beginning to comfort and sustain her to whom he is still reality and memory, inspiration and hope.

Some other gracious friendships, still unbroken, began in these school days. They were bright days, like the days of the average boy, though not wholly unshaded, for, faint and almost undiscovered, there fell across these sunny days the feeling that he was not to survive this present year of time. Now this shadow has changed into supernal light, and there are no shadows upon him.

In due time we find Mr. Morse in college. Here too, he acquitted himself well. A prompt, conscientious and faithful scholar, he won the confidence and respect of his instructors and did not forfeit the good fellowship of his class. How sweet must have been those four years that rose and fell in our great New England valley. The honorable traditions of Wesleyan University, the congenial society of college friends, the reverence for able instructors, the correspondence with the absent and the loved, the bright hopes of days to come, the ever-present stretch of fair fields and on flowing river and distant hills—how sweetly and peacefully all these and kindred scenes built up and illustrated his life.

When he had been graduated he turned naturally and affectionately to the work and the joy of a teacher's life, and after a few years of practice and inevitable experiment he cast in his lot with this community, being chosen by the trustees to take charge of the classical department in the Academy.

Mr. Morse was not a strong man physically, and disease, the most insidious and fatal our New England climate knows, was working secretly in his system. Its culmination was rapid. He was not unaware of the character of his malady. Little by little the truth must have stolen in upon his mind, coming with merciful gradualness. He knew first that he should not recover immediately; then that he would live broken always in health. I doubt not the end was unveiled to him. His mind was perfectly clear and he thought in all those waiting days. Indeed the wider range and tension of his mind was remarkable. He must have looked forward as well as backward, and one morning, when the world was white in this winter robe, and all hearts were glad at the news of his favorable condition, the last veil fell away. Frailty and pain were left behind. The great teachers of the church, the sainted scholars of ancient and modern times, the glorious Lord and perfect Master are his companions.

The speaker first characterized Mr. Morse as a teacher, since it was in this capacity he had been chiefly known to the public. He was a growing teacher, gaining constantly in the esteem of his pupils, the confidence of parents and in the estimate of the trustees. He had ample foundation for growth, and was planning more extended courses of study. His work as a teacher was rapid, carefully elaborated and thorough. He was fond of his department and widely read in other lines of work.

In speaking of the religious life of Mr. Morse it was remarked that he united with the church in boyhood, and that his religious life began and continued in lines of principle rather than emotion. His temperament led him to subordinate feeling and exalt duty. This supremacy of what he believed to be duty was the notable characteristic of his religious life.

In this connection the following extract from a letter received from Prof. Rice was read:

It would be to me a melancholy pleasure to bear testimony to my respect for the pure and conscientious character, the faithfulness in all relations, and the genuine and solid work of our departed brother. He was a man we could trust; and such men are all too few in this world of shams. The words of the 15th Psalm came to my mind as I think of him. Surely he is one of those who shall abide in the tabernacle of the Lord and dwell in holy hill.

In his religious thinking Mr. Morse's views were characterized by clearness and simplicity rather than by theological detail and subtlety. A creed, which he had liked and placed in the front of his Bible, was read as expressing the breadth and charity of his faith:

My Creed:—The glorious Lord; to trust Him, love Him and obey Him, is all that is required. To that creed I invite mankind.

The following passage was also quoted from the eulogy of a distinguished teacher as applicable to Mr. Morse:

"He had been a man of deeds rather than a man of words. He never loved to express his religious feelings to the public gaze; but he had a cautious though firm hope of his acceptance with his Redeemer; and that hope, we feel assured, is now swallowed up in vision."

In temperament Mr. Morse was described as a straightforward man to whom all indirection was distasteful. He was well balanced and symmetrical, somewhat reserved in manner though cordial in spirit, and truly beloved by the people, as shown in the universal sympathy lately manifested.

The discourse closed with a few personal words to the students, teachers and other friends. Mrs. Norcross then sang "Abide With Me." The burial will be at Livermore Falls, Maine.

To the Citizens of Monson:—Allow me to express to you my very great appreciation of the sympathy and tenderness shown for my daughter, Mrs. W. E. Morse, in the time of her deep affliction. The spontaneous manifestation of regard and esteem for her husband, bespoken in your ovation at the funeral obsequies, can but help her to bear the crushing weight of sorrow.

To know that he had labored so effectively among you as to deserve this tribute at your hands will ever be a memory fragrant as the flowers strewn around and over his burial casket. These offerings, more than words, testify to sorrowing friends that he had not lived in vain.

Tears are believing our way as we bear him to home and kindred, where they will flow afresh, but beyond the weeping and the mourning there comes to aching hearts the hope of our immortality; above all shines God's bow of peace.

MILK PRODUCERS INTERESTED

In Practical Talks on Various Matters in This Line.

A session of the Massachusetts Dairy Bureau, under the auspices of the Eastern Hampden Agricultural Society, was held in Memorial Hall Tuesday, beginning at 10 a. m. The meeting was called to order by Arthur D. Norcross, president of the agricultural society, who introduced George L. Clemence of Southbridge, a practical dairyman. Mr. Clemence gave an informal talk on "Barn Ventilation." In introduction he said that in early times a covering was all that was considered necessary for stock, but that about 30 years ago the farmers began to build barns with warmth, but not ventilation, in view, and this bred tuberculosis. About 10 years ago Mr. Clemence began to look about for a model barn, and three years ago he remodeled his barn to conform with the best he had seen. He illustrated his remarks with drawings of this building. He built an addition in which to keep his stock, and in the main building—100 by 40—he keeps his hay and grain. In the basement he has a cold storage for cabbages, also a silo. The addition, 80 by 40, is separated from the main part by a brick partition having iron doors, as a precaution against fire, as so often fire originates in hay. The roof of the addition is metal, and is packed to keep out both heat and cold. It has a monitor top in which there are three ventilators, never closed. Windows are plenty, and are never opened on the side from which the wind blows, and the temperature is kept as near 50° as possible. There are 46 stalls, 23 on either side of the center driveway. These stalls are three feet four inches wide, and are fitted with swing stanchions 10 by 13. For each cow to stand upon is a platform inclined at both ends. For the animal's feet are 15-inch squares of soft pine set on end, mosaic fashion. A device for ventilation upon which the speaker laid much stress is an air duct on either side of the driveway, under the floor; this consists of a box 10 by 14 inches running the length of the building. At alternate stalls there is a hollow post through which the air passes. Running water is always before the cows, and is slightly warmed in cold weather, 60° being the average temperature. An exercise room is situated near the barn; this has a glass roof. The cows are never allowed out doors in the winter. During the hot weather the cows are in the barn from 10 a. m. to 5 p. m., and are sprayed with kerosene to kill the flies. Saw-dust is used for bedding. The cows are fed entirely from the floor. Mr. Clemence referred to a visit he had made to the W. N. Flynt Granite company's stables, and to the large size of the stock. The speaker was plied with questions about tuberculosis, and his remarks called forth much comment.

George M. Whitaker, editor of the New England Farmer, of Boston, was the next speaker. He took for his subject "Variations in the quality of milk." He showed samples of milk which had passed through chemical changes, and said that in a gallon of milk only ½ was solid. He spoke of the carbonaceous and nitrogenous parts, and the province of the two; the former supplies energy and warmth, and the latter flesh and tissues. He said that the fat was extremely variable, and gave as his reasons: First, breed; second, feed; third, care. He gave much attention to this point, saying that as nervousness affected production of milk, cows should never be driven by dogs, or beaten, or ill-treated in any way. The afternoon session began with an exhibition of a separator, in which a gallon of fresh milk was in a very short time separated into cream and "skimmed milk," the one running from one spout of the machine and the other from a spout on the opposite side. While this was going on Mr. Whitaker was testing samples of milk which were brought in by the farmers. This was done by means of the Babcock tester; these samples were mixed with sulphuric acid to dissolve the sugar and caseine in the milk. The tests were as follows: 3 6-10, Durham, new-milch; 3 8-10, short-horn grade; 4 6-10, thoroughbred Jersey; 4 8-10, uncertain breed, part Jersey; 4 8-10, thoroughbred Jersey; 5, thoroughbred Jersey; 5 8-10, part Jersey. The farmers were much interested in these tests, and asked many questions.

The last speaker was Prof. J. B. Lindsey of Amherst Agricultural College, who gave an interesting address upon "Economical feeding of the dairy cow." He first discussed the general principles upon which a rational system of feeding are based. The meaning and value of the different groups of substances, ash, cellulose, fat, protein, and extract matter of which cattle feeds are made up, was explained, and attention called to the fact that all feeds are not utilized by the animal, but only so much as is a source of nourishment, or what the animal can digest and assimilate. Thus, from 20 pounds of hay only about 11 pounds are digested. The coarse feeds are rich in starchy substances, and low in protein. Speaking of summer coarse feed, he mentioned good pasture grass as perfect food for cows, no other being necessary if they can have plenty of it, but as this is not often the case early green crops, such as wheat and rye, are the best to supplement with. Vetch, peas, barnyard millet and oats are all good, the only objection to vetch being that it requires a rich soil and much moisture Hungarian grass comes later; still later barley. For coarse winter feeds he strongly advocated the silo, and recommended corn and soja beans as the most profitable to be put into it, one part soja beans to two parts corn. He then gave the feeding and commercial values, on the basis of protein, of the various grains, and said that for practical purposes it is not necessary to weigh coarse feeds, but grain must be weighed. Feed has slight effect on the quality of milk; the cow stamps her individuality on her product. Very watery feeds tend to produce slightly more water in the milk, and thereby decreases the percentage of solid matter. Cows very poorly nourished yield milk somewhat inferior to what would be produced if well fed. Rations rich in protein, or in fat, or both, will slightly improve the fat contents of the milk. The speaker urged the farmers to raise their own cows.

Dr. Mary Walker Spends Sunday in Monson.

Dr. Mary E. Walker paid her first visit to Monson during the past week. She was the guest of Mrs. Charles G. Thompson at the Century Hotel from Saturday night to Tuesday morning. It will be of interest to our readers to know that Dr. Walker made Mrs. Thompson's acquaintance through reading her poem, "Two Churches," published in the JOURNAL January 17th. The famous doctor attracted much attention wherever she went, and received calls from Monson's most prominent people, Mrs. George C. Flynt giving her the use of her carriage during the visit. Dr. Walker's personal appearance will also be of interest to those who did not see her: She is 5 feet 4 inches tall, slight in form, has small hands and feet, small features, blue or gray eyes, a broad forehead, and thick, somewhat gray hair, and sub rosa, is 63 years old; She wore men's clothes. Her suit was of black broadcloth, the trousers being of the regulation style; her coat was a Prince Albert with velvet collar and velvet buttons; her boots of soft leather; her linen collar a standup, with squarely turned points; her tie, a Teck, ornamented with a cluster of gold beads, a family heir-loom; her cuffs were fastened in place with common, every-day pins, thrust through the sleeve, woman-fashion; her overcoat long, and having a cape; her hat, a beaver; over her ears, a veil; in her hand she carried a gold-headed umbrella; on the lapel of her coat she wore a bronze medal which was one of 60 struck off during the war and presented to her for services as assistant surgeon to the Army of the Potomac. In connection with her army life Dr. Walker repeated a poem which she wrote at that time and which gave rise to the custom of placing the flag upon the soldiers' graves. It is as follows:

I love it! I love it! Ah, who shall dare,
To chide me for loving that flag so fair?
I treasured it long for the patriot's pride,
And wept for the heroes who for it died.
'Tis bound by a thousand spells to my heart,
Nothing on earth can e're us part.
Would you learn the spell? There's liberty there
Making that flag the fairest of fair.
Then chide me not if here I wave
That flag redeemed by brothers brave.
For while I live that flag shall be
Waving over you and me.
When I am buried neath the ground,
Wrap that flag my corpse around,
Plant that flag above my grave,
There let it wave! Let it wave!

Dr. Walker expressed herself as delighted with Monson and Monson people, and said many nice things about the Century. On Saturday evening she gave the newspapers rather a hard hit, not knowing, however, that she was addressing the JOURNAL representative when she said: "You can't believe one word you see in the newspaper; Not one word! Inaccuracies in regard to myself used to plunge me into tears, and I often cried half the night over some criticism. Now that I am almost as old as Methuselah I am more philosophical." When told that there was no appearance of her having attained to such antiquity she said, "We live in deeds, not years alone." Dr. Walker is spending some time in Greenwich, but her home is in Oswego, N. Y., where she is making a strong effort to found a home for consumptives. She is enthusiastic in every undertaking, and will no doubt be successful in this one.

WALES.

Luther Baker, aged 90, and the oldest man in town, is very low and liable to pass away at any moment.

Bradley Frye and wife of Orange have been visiting a few days among friends. Mr. Frye formerly lived here and has many friends who are always glad to see him.

Mrs. Cybil Trask, an old and infirm lady, died suddenly Sunday at the home of her cousin, William Gordon, where she was visiting. Her home was in the west part of the town, where she lived alone in a very secluded manner, having but scant resources. She was about 80 years old.

The funeral of John Fisher, who died here Sunday, aged 74 years, was attended Tuesday at his late residence. Burial was at Sturbridge, his former home. He was the father of A. F. Fisher, the local stone and tinware dealer, and had lived with his son here a good share of the time for the past four years, and recently had moved his family here, intending to spend his life near his son. He leaves a widow and several children.

A very interesting entertainment was given in the vestry of the Methodist church Monday evening by one of the district schools of Union, Ct., under the direction of the teacher, Miss English, of New Britain, Ct., assisted by Mrs. Upham, one of the parents in the district. The exercises consisted of tableaux, recitations and singing. Most of the performers were young children, who showed great training; their recitations and singing were excellent. A sister of the teacher, a young lady of about 14 years, sang several solos which were rendered well and showed a good scope of voice. Solos by Mrs. Upham were encored several times, and were very much appreciated. Two recitations by Miss English were very well rendered.

In the list of living members of the family of the late Elijah Shaw last week, the names of two sisters were omitted, Mrs. Nancy Atkins of Wilbraham, widow of the late Rev. Daniel Atkins, and Mrs. Caroline Kellogg of Stafford Springs, Ct., wife of Chester H. Kellogg, formerly of Wales. Another sister, Mary Parker, died several years ago; she was the wife of the late David F. Parker, formerly a merchant of this place. Warren Shaw, the oldest brother, also died four years ago. These, with the two mentioned last week, complete the names of the six children of Solomon and Mary Shaw, who were life-long residents of Wales, all of their children being born here on the old so-called Solomon Shaw place, now owned by H. A. McFarland.

WARREN.

Rev. Louis Giroux preached in the Congregational church last Sunday, on the French Protestant College at Springfield.

Rev. Mr. Tisdale, a former pastor of the Methodist church, and father of Mr. W. S. Tisdale, died at his home in Providence Tuesday afternoon.

A union meeting of the Ladies' Home Missionary Society and the Woman's Board for Foreign Missions was held at the parsonage Wednesday afternoon.

W. J. Tagan, a well-known marketman, was married Monday afternoon to Miss Sullivan of Ware. The ceremony was performed at All Saints' church in Ware.

A unique entertainment in the form of a chafing dish supper will be given at the home of Mrs. George Shumway on the evening of Valentine Day, February, 14th. The proceeds are to be devoted to home charities. The entertainment is to be given under the auspices of the King's Daughters.

A meeting of the Quaboag Historical Society was held in the Congregational church Tuesday afternoon and was very well attended. In the absence of the president, the vice-president, J. T. Wood of West Brookfield, presided. A large number of new members were admitted, and the total is now 375. The programme consisted of an organ voluntary, J. E. Lombard; address, Rev. Carlton A. Staples of Lexington, on "Lexington life 125 years ago;" contralto solo, Miss Mary Q. Moore; essay, "Glimpses of local history," Danforth Keyes; solo, Miss Mary R. Moore; address, Dr. J. C. Cutter of Worcester. The afternoon's entertainment closed with light refreshments served in the chapel. The meeting in June will be held in Brookfield, the time to be appointed by the Brookfield branch.

Who Will Get the Wool?

An interesting event in business circles the past week has been the contest for the possession of several car loads of wool which were purchased by Sayles & Jenks of Philip Jacode & Co. of Philadelphia. Before the wool was delivered to Sayles & Jenks it was replevined by the Tradesmens Bank of New York on the score of warehouse receipts given them by Keene-Suttler & Co. of Philadelphia, the original possessors of the wool. The latter firm has recently failed with liabilities amounting to $2,000,000. Ere the failure they borrowed $40,000 from the Tradesmens Bank, giving as security warehouse receipts for 1300 bales of wool. Afterward they sold said wool to Philip Jacode & Co., who in turn sold part of it to Sayles & Jenks. Upon its arrival in Warren the bank placed a replevin on it and attempted to ship it to New York, when it was again replevined by Philip Jacode & Co. against the Boston & Albany railroad shipping it out of town, and three cars were unloaded and stored here. This and the sealed cases which are side-tracked are carefully guarded by Sheriff Putman and his assistants. Ex-Gov. Russell of Boston and District Attorney Gardner of Palmer are acting as counsel for the Tradesmens Bank, and Thayer & Rugg of Worcester for Philip Jacode & Co. Both parties have given funds to the American Surity Co. to the amount of $60,000.

THE NEW WASH STUFFS.

That windowful of new things is winning the highest praises. Designers must have been living all winter long in rare tropical gardens, you think, amongst brilliant foliage and lovely flowers to conceive the effects in some of these new things—the fine printed organdies and dotted Swiss mull, for instance. Did anything ever suggest balmy days and summer sunshine more than these?

And yet, the prettiest things are not in the window, perhaps, you'll think when you see the scores and scores of new stuffs at the counter.

Right aisle.

A GARNITURE HUBBUB.

The name is appropriate. The news caused a hubbub Saturday aud is likely to as long as the garniture lasts.

French and German Jet and braided garnitures—our New York office's samples are going at about what they'll fetch—25 cents to a $10. Dressmakers had better come.

BUTTONS AND TRIMMINGS.

The new things are prettier and in greater variety by far than we have ever seen them. We venture to say that nobody else in this region has such a collection, and the assortments are growing greater every day.

Left aisle.

DAINTY LANSDOWNE.

Made by William F. Read of Philadelphia and stamped in the selvedge every few yards with his name. No other silk and wool stuff will ever equal it, probably either in the exquisiteness of the fabric or the luxuriousness of the coloring—$1 a yard. These colors are just in: Navy, nile, brown, green, wine, lavender, old rose, slate, orange, light blue, fawn, pink, canary, cream.

A tired stomach is very much like a sprained ankle. If you suffer from any of the symptoms of dyspepsia your stomach is tired. It needs a crutch. We must relieve it of all work for a time, or until it is restored to its natural strength. To do this successfully, we must use a food which is already digested outside of the body, and which will aid the digestion of other foods that may be taken with it. Such a product is the Shaker Digestive Cordial.

The Shakers have utilized the digestive principles present in plants for the manufacture of this article, and its success has been truly phenomenal. You can try it for the nominal sum of 10 cents, as sample bottles are sold by all druggists at this price.

With anything you can think of, that water doesn't hurt, the easiest way to wash it or to clean it is to take Pearline. You can't do any harm, by doing away with that wearing rub, rub, rub. Besides, with almost everything, there are special reasons why you should use Pearline. For instance:

There's no shrink to flannels, if they're properly washed with it.

Gravel Cured.

(Philadelphia, Penn., Item.)

A healthier, heartier, happier man than John J. Neill, of 2457 North Eighth street, Philadelphia, could not be found in a day's search. The fact that he is still alive is a constant wonder to his friends.

In the fall of 1879 he began to suffer indescribable miseries from stone in the bladder. Consulting an eminent physician in Philadelphia, he was told that a surgical operation was necessary. So much did he dread the results, for if unsuccessful it meant death, that he put off the evil day as long as possible. While in this frame of mind he heard of

Although disheartened, on July 1, 1893, he bought a bottle of it, and within a month had experienced beneficial results, and before he had finished the third bottle, the gravel was completely dissolved and his sufferings at an end.

Mr. Neill feels that he owes a lasting debt of gratitude to Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy, and for disorders of the bladder and urinary organs, says "it will effect a cure if one be possible."

Favorite Remedy is prescribed with unfailing success for rheumatism, dyspepsia and nerve troubles, in which it has cured many who were considered beyond the aid of medicine. All druggists, $1.

Wynken, Blynken, and Nod.

Wynken, Blynken, and Nod one night
Sailed off in a wooden shoe—
Sailed on a river of crystal light
Into a sea of dew;
"Where are you going and what do you wish?"
The old man asked the three.
"We have come to fish for the herring-fish
That live in the beautiful sea;
Nets of silver and gold have we,"
Said Wynken,
Blynken,
And Nod.

The old moon laughed and sang a song,
As they rocked in the wooden shoe—
And the wind that sped them all night long
Ruffled the waves of dew;
The little stars were the herring-fish
That lived in that beautiful sea;
"Now cast your nets wherever you wish—
Never afeared are we."
So cried the stars to the fishermen three—
Wynken,
Blynken,
And Nod.

All night long their nets they threw
To the stars in twinkling foam—
Then down from the skies came the wooden shoes,
'Twas all so pretty a sail it seemed
As if it could not be,
And some folks thought 'twas a dream they'd dreamed
Of sailing that beautiful sea;
But I shall name you the fishermen three:
Wynken,
Blynken,
And Nod.

Wynken and Blynken are two little eyes,
And Nod is a little head,
And the wooden shoes that sailed the skies
Is a wee one's trundle bed;
So shut your eyes while mother sings
Of wonderful sights that be,
And you shall see the beautiful things
As you rock in the misty sea
Where the old shoe rocked the fishermen three—Wynken,
Blynken,
And Nod.

Scrofula

Infests the blood of humanity. It appears in varied forms, but is forced to yield to Hood's Sarsaparilla, which purifies and vitalizes the blood and cures all such diseases. Read this:

"In September, 1894, I made a misstep and injured my ankle. Very soon afterwards,

A Sore

two inches across formed and in walking to favor it I sprained my ankle. The sore became worse; I could not put my boot on and I thought I should have to give up at every step. I could not get any relief and had to stop work. I read of a cure of a similar case by Hood's Sarsaparilla and concluded to try it. Before I had taken all of two bottles the sore had healed and the swelling had gone down. My is now well and I have been greatly benefited otherwise. I have increased in weight and am in better health. I cannot say enough in praise of Hood's Sarsaparilla." MRS. H. BLAKE, So. Berwick, Me.

MAINE STATE COLLEGE.

Having stepped from the streets of Bangor, the "Queen City of the East," into an electric car after enjoying for three-quarters of an hour the riverside scenery of the Penobscot, one arrives at the attractive grounds of the Maine State College, just outside the village of Orono. This college, established in 1865 and supported by the state and national governments, is a school of science and technology. That it is in no sense simply or chiefly an agricultural college is shown by the fact that of the entering class numbering over a hundred last fall, only two elected the agricultural course. The college offers no instruction in the ancient languages, but gives a full list of courses in the natural and exact sciences and their technical application. None of its courses is without a full complement of those studies which are especially useful for general training and culture. The courses leading to degrees are eight in number, each requiring four years for completion. The scientific course is substantially identical with the course of the same name now found in the curriculum of each of the more progressive colleges of the country. Diverging from this are the technical courses, civil mechanical, and electrical engineering, the chemical agricultural and preparatory medical course, and one of the three four years' courses in pharmacy offered in the United States. Besides these, there are several short courses, most of which include practical work mainly. Among the shorter courses a course in library economy, designed to give training for the profession of librarian, is one of only two such courses offered in the United States. Especial attention is given by students in all departments to the study of English, civics and modern languages, French and German; and in some departments Italian and Spanish are studied. In fact, every course is planned to furnish with the technical instruction it includes, the basis of a liberal education.

All departments are well equipped for first-class work, some of the facilities being the best of their kind in New England. Laboratories in every engineering department, a machine shop, foundry, forge and wood-working rooms, a new electric light plant, these are some of the facilities for technical instruction that are offered. A large addition is to be made at once to the chemistry building, and on account of the increase of the number of students, another large building for the accommodation of engineering work will probably be built soon.

Military instruction is required by United States law. This department is in charge of a graduate of West Point, an officer of the regular army detailed by the President to the United States for this purpose. Captain Edgerly, who has been detailed for the next four years, was in service under Custer. Each year the cadets go to some part of the state for a week of regular camp life.

The president of the college is Abram W. Harris, Sc. D., a man who has scarcely reached middle life, and one of whom every student of Maine State College feels justly proud. Through his earnest efforts the institution is making great strides of progress. To what extent his soul is in his work may be judged from the fact that, soon after receiving his appointment, he caused his salary to be cut down, so that more of the money appropriated by the state might be used for increasing the facilities of the college. Associated with President Harris are competent men in charge of every department,—men of solid stamp and strong personality and character.

There are about 275 students in the college, the number having doubled in the past two years. Between 15 and 20 of the students are young women, eight of whom entered this year. All the courses are open to women, although they usually take the general, scientific, or the library course.

Tuition is free to students from any state, as the college is partly supported by the national government. Rooms in the dormitory are also free. In the act of Legislature which provided for the establishment of the college, trustees and all persons employed by them were directed to make the expenses of students as low as possible. Considering, therefore, the matter of expense as well as educational facilities, Maine State College offers opportunities unequalled by any college in New England.

Under the joint control of the state superintendent of schools and the college, a summer school intended especially for teachers is maintained without charge for tuition. There are recitations, lectures and laboratory courses in chemistry, physics, geology, botany and zoölogy, and instruction is given in English civics, pedagogy and child study.

The village of Orono is situated upon the Maine Central railroad, and is thus easily accessible. In summer a trip by boat from Boston to Bangor is one of the pleasantest; and the invigorating air and picturesque scenery of this part of the journey are followed by the beautiful views along the Penobscot as one approaches the college. The college grounds are pleasantly situated on the banks of the Stillwater river; and, indeed, the location of an institution of which Maine may well be proud is all that could be desired.

BRIDAL SUPERSTITIONS.

There are many superstitions surrounding the bridal day, some having descended from semi-barbaric times, when every tremble of a leaf or every change in the weather portended good or evil. According to old ideas, brave is the girl who will consent to be wed on Friday, or during the month of May, while June, September, October and December smiled graciously upon her, barring always the 13th day of every month.

Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday were considered the best days to be married on, if assurance of happiness is desired, for

Monday for wealth,
Tuesday for health,
Wednesday the best day of all!
Thursday for crosses,
Friday for losses,
Saturday no luck at all.

A bride-elect is happy, truly, if the sun shines upon the great day, for "Blest is the bride upon whom the sun doth shine."

And another adage says:—

"To change the name and not the letter,
Is a change for the worse and not the better."

From time immemorial among the Jews, the fourth day of the week was unlucky for maidens, and the fifth for widows. The ancient Romans looked askance on the nones or ides of each month.

Dreadful, indeed, is the postponement of a wedding, even in this practical age. Many are wedded on a bed of pain, or in a house of mourning, rather than change the day.

Of undaunted courage was she who dared don the bridal finery in its entirety before the hour of the ceremony, as death and dire misfortune were supposed to follow.

The right shoe should be put on first, for if the bride draws on the left shoe by mistake, she will have an unhappy married life.

Another idea was this: To try on a wedding ring before the ceremony is unpropitious. Should the shaking hand of the groom drop this symbol of love in the act of putting it on the bride's finger, the ceremony had better be stopped right there. To lose it is prophetic of evil, and many fancy to remove it after it is placed on the finger is unlucky.

The breaking of a wedding ring is surely prophetic of the death of one of the married twain, according to old legends.

There is an explanation to this superstition:—

"As the wedding ring wears,
So wear away life's cares."

The throwing of rice and old slippers (which should never be omitted) is descended from antiquity, rice meaning fertility and plenty, while the old shoe is supposed to invoke the favor of the fickle goddess of fortune.

Above all things a bride must still weep on her wedding day, no matter how happy she may be. She must squeeze out a tear or so, for the bride who neglects to weep will be very unhappy indeed.—Rehoboth Sunday Herald.

DR. GREENE'S NERVURA

Cured Gen. Buzzell, Department Commander of New Hampshire G. A. R.

The Famous Commander Writes to the People to Use Dr. Greene's Nervura. It cured him. It Will Cure You.

GEN. CHARLES E. BUZZELL.

Gen. Charles E. Buzzell, of Lakeport, N. H., Department Commander of New Hampshire G. A. R., has something of interest to say to the people in regard to the remarkable curative powers of Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy. Few men are more widely known than Gen. Buzzell, who is Street Commissioner of Lakeport, and the most prominent builder and contractor in the State. The General says:—

"I was terribly run down in health and as a result of over-work, became nervous, weak, tired, and without my old-time energy and ambition. I grew so fearfully nervous that I could not rest nor sleep nights, but would be obliged to get up and walk about several times each night. I would get tired and nervous so easily and quickly that it became almost impossible for me to attend to my business. At the same time I had a most severe and distressing backache.

"I took Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy and it helped me right away. My nerves were so strengthened and invigorated that the nervousness left me, and I could again sleep soundly nights, and wake mornings refreshed and feeling strong and vigorous. The backache is completely cured. I am now perfectly well and better able than ever to attend to my business. I have recommended this wonderful remedy to several others and it has cured them all. I urge people to use it because I know it will make them well."

Gen. Buzzell's case was like thousands of others.

People from overwork, strain upon brain and nerve or other cause, break down in health, feel that they are physically weak and that their nerve strength, energy and power are greatly diminished. Just so sure as night follows day will prostration and debility, the wreck of nerves, brain and body, follow if a cure is not immediately sought.

Neglect is the fatal thing. Never allow the first symptoms—the tired feeling, the weakened nerves, the loss of power of endurance, the lack of snap and energy—to drift you into total loss of health. Take Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy now, and it will cure you as it cured Gen. Buzzell, as it has cured thousands upon thousands of others. It is the great curer of disease, the great strengthener of nerves, the great builder up of blood, the great invigorator of brain and body. It will make you well.

Do not class this most valuable remedy with patent medicines. It is a physician's prescription, and its discoverer, Dr. Greene, of 34 Temple Place, Boston, Mass., has the largest and most successful practice in the world in nervous and chronic diseases, and can be consulted free of charge, personally or by letter.

NOTHING TO DRINK BUT WATER.

It was somewhat early in the morning when a reporter dropped into the wet goods department of a popular downtown hotel, where there is always to be found a large Southern contingent—in the hotel, not in the W. G. department—and standing at the counter there he saw a well-known Kentuckian of the older school. It was about ten days after the election news had been received from Kentucky, and the Kentuckian's brow was not crowned with sunlight or laurels. On the contrary, it was swathed in heavy gray clouds. It may be explained here that the reporter was not in that locality after a drink, but after a man who was after a drink. As he stood talking to him his attention was attracted by the Kentuckian's talk to the barkeeper, who had shoved a well-worn black bottle out in front of his customer.

"Take it away," said the Kentuckian, gloomily, with a funeral wave of his hand.

"What's the matter with it?" asked the surprised barkeeper. "It's the same Kentucky brand you've been using for years."

"I know it," he said regretfully, "but since Kentucky went Republican it doesn't seem to taste natural and I've got to try something else. Suppose you give me a little of that Maryland rye."

"Certainly, sir," said the barkeeper, deferentially, and turned to get it, but stopped half way.

"Excuse me, sir," he ventured, "but didn't Maryland go that way, too?"

The Kentuckian thrummed on the counter with his knuckles nervously.

"That's so, that's so," he mused; then he broke out fiercely, "I wonder if I've got to drink water," and walked out of the place in dismay.—Washington Star.

A NATIONAL PREJUDICE.—It was a very hot day, and when Mr. Dunnigan happened to meet his daughter with her friend, he, wishing to do the polite thing, invited them to have some ice cream, an invitation which was at once accepted. When they were seated at the table in the ice cream parlor, Mr. Dunnigan, addressing his daughter's friend, affably inquired: "An' phot koind will yez have, my dear?" "I will take some orange ice," she replied. Mr. Dunnigan's brow darkened, and glaring at the young lady malevolently, he thundered: "Av yez do, ye'll arder it yersilf."—Harper's Magazine.

"Make One More Gun for Me."

Yes, sir, I fought with Stonewall,
And faced the fight with Lee;
But if this here Union goes to war,
Make one more gun for me!
I didn't shrink from Sherman
As he galloped to the sea;
But if this here Union goes to war,
Make one more gun for me!

I was with 'em at Manassas—
The bully boys in gray;
I heard the thunders roarin'
Round Stonewall Jackson's way.
And many a time this sword of mine
Has blazed the route for Lee;
But if this old Union goes to war,
Buy one more gun for me!

I'm not so full o' fightin',
Nor half so full o' fun
As I was back in the sixties
When I shouldered my old gun!
It may be that my hair is white—
Sich things, you know, must be;
But if this old Union's in for fight,
Make one more gun for me!

I hain't forgot my raisin'—
Nor how, in sixty-two,
Or thereabouts, with battle shouts
I charged the boys in blue;
And I say: I fought with Stonewall,
And blazed the way with Lee;
But if this old Union's in for war,
Make one more gun for me!

ABOUT THE AMERICAN NAVY.

"If we had 30 ships like our new-built monitor Puritan we could defend our coasts against the navy of Great Britain," said Admiral Jouett yesterday. "She is the greatest fighting vessel ever built, and she can whip any war craft afloat in the world to-day. She cannot be sunk, and to hit her is almost out of the question, because she sits so low in the water. On that account she cannot be seen actually at a distance of two miles, and to strike her with a shot would be as difficult as to hit the edge of a visiting card at fifty paces with a pistol bullet. Not the strongest battle ship could withstand the blows delivered simultaneously from her four great 12-inch rifled guns, concentrated on the target and discharged together by the touch of an electric button.

"What can a whole fleet of ordinary war vessels do against a powerfully-armed antagonist that is practically invulnerable? The average cruiser or battle ship towers 25 or 30 feet above the water—that is to say, as high as an ordinary house. She is an easy target at a distance of 8 or 10 miles, taking into consideration the accuracy of modern gunnery. The Puritan, on the other hand, shows only 30 inches above the water line. She presents no target, while she is able to 'plug' the high free-board vessels every time before they can even come in sight of her.

"A few such vessels as the Puritan would be infinitely more effective for coast defence purposes than the best possible forts. You may have as many forts and guns along the coast as you please, but what use are they as long as hostile ships armed with modern high-water guns can stand off on the ocean at a distance of 10 or 14 miles and plunk shot and shell into us? Excellent preparations have been made for the protection of the harbor of New York from the land, but they are not likely to be efficient so long as the enemy's fleet can pause at a safe distance outside of Sandy Hook and cast explosives upon the Island of Manhattan.

"That this might be done without difficulty there is no possible doubt. But half a dozen ships like the Puritan would render such a thing impossible. Protected by such defenders the great American metropolis would be absolutely safe against any attack by sea; its billions of dollars' worth of property would not be imperiled and there need be no more alarm lest the city be laid under contribution by a foreign invader.

"In a vessel like the Puritan we have not merely an engine for harbor defense. Such a ship is able to go around the world. It is the stanchest type of craft that floats and nothing can sink it. The suggestion has been made that such monitors could not fight their guns in a seaway, but no notion could be more absurd. Admiral Bunce not long ago took the Monterey, an inferior vessel of similar type, out into the ocean with the deliberate purpose of looking for a storm. He went through two big gales and his ship floated like a duck on the water and was perfectly manageable under conditions which would have rendered it impossible for other war vessels to cast loose their guns. He found that he could pass the bar of the Columbia river when merchant steamers did not dare to make the attempt, and that without the slightest discomfort. In a word we have in the Puritan an unequaled floating gun platform.

"Did you ever see a pine chip and a hickory chip floating near together on troubled water? If so, you will have noticed that the pine chip bobbed about on the crest of every wave, while the heavy hickory chip was comparatively undisturbed by the waves breaking over it. The monitor of the Puritan type corresponds to the hickory chip; though the waves break over it no trouble results. It is an air-tank hermetically sealed and it cannot sink. There is no question of its 'turning turtle' and going to the bottom like a battle ship. Admiral Bunce, who is the greatest living authority on monitors, says that the only fault of the Puritan is that she stands too high out of the water; she might as well be nearly flush with the surface. Many years ago he commanded one of the old monitors, and he found that the lower the vessel was sunk in the water by taking on extra coal the steadier she was.

"We do not wish to invade England or her possessions, but merely to drive her fleets from our shores in case they should attack us. This we could accomplish with ease, if only we had a few more such vessels as the Puritan. The Puritan, as you know, is almost finished. We have five other modern double-turreted monitors—the Miantonomah, the Amphitrite, the Monterey, the Monadnock and the Terror. The Puritan, with a displacement of 6000 tons, is much the larger of the six. Next comes the Monterey of 4084 tons. The remaining four are of 3990 tons each. These vessels will doubtless cut a large figure in a war with England in case such a misfortune should eventuate. All of these monitors are powerfully armed, the Puritan carrying four 12-inch rifles, the Monterey two 12-inch and two 10-inch, and the Amphitrite, Miantonomoh and Terror four 10-inch. In addition to these great guns, each of the monitors is formidably equipped with rapid-fire and machine guns. The Amphitrite, Miantonomah and Monterey are in commission. The other three are nearly finished.—Washington Correspondence of the Philadelphia Times.

FORTUNES IN CRIPPLE CREEK MINES.

On the western slope of Pike's Peak, about twenty miles away in a direct line, lies Cripple Creek, now the leading gold-mining camp of Colorado. It is not to be mentioned as a health resort, as it is 9500 feet high, and much exposed; nor should the invalid even visit it without his physician's consent. But it is an interesting place for a robust man. Its mines, which for so long were looked upon as not likely to amount to much, really do amount to a good deal, as any one who cares for statistics may learn by consulting a mining broker. Lying as it does, within the limits of El Paso county, it has thrown much business into Colorado Springs, the county seat. Some people near and far have made money out of these mines. One, a carpenter, who used to work in the Springs for $3 a day, now owns the whole Independence mine, and draws from $40,000 to $100,000 from it each month. During the first four months of 1895 his income from various mining properties was $600,000. As an offset to this man's luck it should be said that many persons, visitors in Colorado as well as permanent residents, have invested much money in mines which they could not well afford to lose.—From The Neo-Republican Ascendancy, by Pres. Benj. Andrews, in the February Scribner's.

Across The Delaware.

The winter night is cold and drear
Along the river's sullen flow;
The cruel frost is camping here—
The air has flying blades of snow.
Look! Pushing from the icy strand,
With ensigns freezing in the air,
There sails a small but mighty band,
Across the dan'grous Delaware.

O wherefore, soldiers, would you fight
The bayonets of a winter storm?
In truth, it were a better night
For blazing fire, and blankets warm!
We seek to trap a foreign foe,
We carry Freedom as we go
Across the storm-swept Delaware!

The night is full of lusty cheer
Within the Hessian's merry camp;
And faint and fainter on the ear
Doth fall the heedless sentry's tramp.
O hirelings, this new nation's rage
Is something 'tis not well to dare;
You are not fitted to engage
These men from o'er the Delaware!

A rush—a shout—a clarion call
Salute the early morning's gray:
Now, roused invaders, yield or fall;
The refuge-land has won the day!
Soon shall the glorious news be hurled
Wherever men have wrongs to bear;
For Freedom's torch illumes the world,
And God has crossed the Delaware!

A CONSPIRACY.

"I wouldn't marry the best man that ever lived!" And she meant it, or, what answers the same purpose, she thought she meant it. After all, how very few of us really know what we mean? "I engaged myself once, when a girl, and the simpleton thought he owned me. I took the conceit out of him and sent him away about his business." The voice was now a little sharp. What wonder, with so galling a memory? "No man shall ever tyrannize me—never! What the mischief do you suppose is the matter with this sewing machine?"

"Annoyed at your logic, most likely," said my friend, a bright young matron, as she threaded her needle. "My husband is not a tyrant, Miss Kent."

"I am glad you are satisfied," was the laconic reply.

It was quite evident by the expression of the dressmaker's face that she had formed her own opinion about my friend's husband and was quite competent to form and express an opinion on any subject. Miss Kent was a little woman, fair as a girl and plump as a robin. She wasn't ashamed to own that she was 40 years old and an old maid. She had earned her own living most of her life and was proud of it. She was a good nurse, a faithful friend and a jolly companion, but stroke her the wrong way, and you'd wish you hadn't in much shorter time than it takes to write it. Her views on all subjects were strikingly original and not to be combated.

"What are you going to do when you are old?" persisted the mistress of the establishment.

"What other folks do, I suppose."

"But you can't work forever."

"Can't say that I want to."

"Now, Miss Kent, a husband with means, a kind, intelligent man"——

"I don't want any man. I tell you, Mrs. Carlisle, I wouldn't marry the best man living if he was as rich as Croesus and would die if I didn't have him. Now, if you have exhausted the marriage question, I should like to try on your dress."

There was something behind all this, I knew well. My friend's eyes danced with fun, and as Miss Kent fitted the waist she threw me a letter from the bureau.

"Read that," she said, with a knowing look. "It may amuse you."

This is what the letter said:

MY DEAR JENNIE:—I shall be delighted to spend a month with you and your husband. There must, however, be one stipulation about my visit—you must say no more about marriage. I shall never be foolish again. Twenty years ago to-day I wrecked my whole life. ["Better embark in a new ship, hadn't he?" put in Jennie, sotto voce.] So unsuitable was the marriage, so utterly and entirely wretched have been its consequences, that I am forced to believe the marriage institution a mistake. So, for the last time, let me assure you that I wouldn't marry the best woman that ever lived if by so doing I could save her life. Your old cousin, MARK LANSING.

"Rich, isn't it ?" said Jennie, and then pointed to the chubby little figure whose back happened to be turned.

I shook my head and laughed.

"You'll see," said the incorrigible.

"See what?" inquired Miss Kent, quite unaware of the pantomime.

"That parties which are chemically attracted will unite—of course an alkali and an acid. Don't you think this sleeve a little too long, Miss Kent?"

"Not after the seam is off. But what were you saying, Mrs. Carlisle? The other day at Professor Boynton's I saw some wonderful experiments."

"And did they succeed?" inquired Jennie, demurely.

"Beautifully!"

"So will mine. I never yet botched a job in my life."

"I don't think I quite understand you," replied Miss Kent, perplexed.

"No?" I always grow scientific when talking about marriage, my dear."

"Bother!" was all the little woman said, but the tone was much better natured than I expected.

The next week Cousin Mark arrived, and I liked him at once. An unhappy marriage would have been the last thing thought of in connection with that gentleman. He had accepted the situation like a man, Jennie told me, and for 15 years carried a load of misery that few could have endured. Death came to him at last, and now the poor fellow actually believed himself an alien from domestic happiness.

Singularly as it may appear, Cousin Mark was the embodiment of good health and good nature. Fifty perhaps, though he didn't look it, and as rotund and as fresh in his way as the little dressmaker was in hers. As I looked at him I defied anybody to see one and not be reminded of the other. Truth, he had more of the polish which comes from travel and adaptation to different classes and individuals, but he was not a whit more intelligent by nature than the little woman whom Jennie determined he should marry.

"I was surprised you should think it necessary to caution me about that, Cousin Mark," cooed the plotter as she stood by his side looking out of the window. "The idea of my being so ridiculous!" and in the same breath, with a wink at me: "Come, let us go to my sitting room. We are at work there, but it won't make any difference to you, will it?"

Of course Cousin Mark said "No," promptly, as innocent as a dove about the trap being laid for him.

"This is my cousin, Mr. Lansing, Miss Kent."

Mr. Lansing bowed politely, and Miss Kent rose, dropped her scissors, blushed and sat down again. Cousin Mark picked up the refactory implements, and then Mrs. Carlisle proceeded, with rare caution and tact, to her labor of love. Cousin Mark, at her request, read aloud an article from a magazine, drawing Miss Kent into the discussion as deftly as was ever a fly drawn into the web of a spider.

"Who is that lady, Jennie?" Cousin Mark inquired in the evening.

"You mean Miss Kent?" said Jennie, looking up from her paper. "Oh, she is a lady. I have known her for a long time. She is making some dresses for me now. Why?"

"She seems uncommonly well posted for a woman."

Under any other circumstances Mrs. Carlisle would have resented this, but now she only queried, "Do you think so?" and that ended it.

Two or three invitations to the sewing room were sufficient to make Cousin Mark at home there, and after a week he became familiar enough to say:

"Oh, I am never too busy to be read to,"

"If you are not too busy, I should like to read you this article."

Miss Kent would say. "Sit down by the window in this comfortable chair and let's hear it."

After a couple of weeks, when the gentleman came in hoarse with a sudden cold, Miss Kent bustled about, her voice full of sympathy, and brewed him a dose which he declared he should not forget to his dying day, but one dose cured. After this occurred Miss Kent was a really wonderful woman.

Ah, what an arch plotter! She let them skirmish about, but not for once did she give them a chance to be alone together. Her plans were not to be destroyed by premature confidence until the very evening preceding Cousin Mark's departure for California. Then Miss Kent was very demurely asked to remain and keep an eye on Master Carlisle, whom the fond mother did not like to leave quite alone with his nurse.

"We are compelled to be gone a couple of hours," said she, 'but Cousin Mark will read to you, won't you, cousin?'

"Certainly, if Miss Kent would like it," replied the gentleman.

The infant Carlisle, thanks to good management, was never awake in the evening, so the victims of this matrimonial speculation would have plenty of time. The back parlor was the room most in use during the evening, and out of that room was a large closet, with a large blind elevator, and out of this closet a door leading to the stoop and garden. Imagine my surprise when I was told that Mr. Carlisle was going to the lodge, and that we, after profuse warnings about the baby and promises not to be gone too long, were to proceed to this closet overlooking the back parlor by way of the back gate and garden. In vain I protested.

"Oh, you little goosie," said Jennie laughing. "There'll be fun enough to last us a life time. John wanted to come awfully, but I knew he'd make an awful noise and spoil everything, so I wouldn't let him."

The wily schemer took the precaution to lock the closet door from the outside, so there was no fear of detection. On a high bench, as still as two mice, we waited results.

Presently Cousin Mark, as if arousing from a protracted reverie, asked:

"Would you like to have me read?"

"Oh, I am not particular," replied Miss Kent.

"Here is an excellent article on elective affinities. How would you like that?"

Jennie's elbow in my side almost took away my breath.

"Who is it by?" she inquired.

Jennie exclaimed clear in my ear:

"That's to gain time. See if it isn't. Now for something interesting."

"It's by a prominent French writer, I believe," answered Cousin Mark.

"I don't think I care for a translation to-night," said Miss Kent.

"Nor I. Nor reading of any kind," he continued. "This is my last evening in New York, Miss Kent."

I hope you've enjoyed your visit," she returned.

Jennie—into my very head this time—"She is as shy as a 3-years-old colt."

"I didn't think I should feel so bad about leaving," Cousin Mark went on.

"He is the wreck, you remember," whispered Jennie.

A long pause.

"I think I hear the baby," exclaimed Miss Kent.

"Oh, no," said Cousin Mark. "You are fond of babies, are you not, Miss Kent?"

No answer for Miss Kent.

"I have been a very lonely man, Miss Kent," Cousin Mark resumed, "but never realized how lonely the rest of my life must be until I came to this house."

"Oh, how lonely!" echoed Jennie.

"Now I must return to my business and my boarding house—boarding-house for a man so fond of domestic life as I am, Miss Kent."

Just then we very distinctly heard a little kind of a purr, which sounded very like a note of intense sympathy from Miss Kent.

"I have friends in San Francisco, of course," said Cousin Mark, "but no fireside like this—no one to care for me if I'm ill, nobody to feel badly if I die."

"That'll fetch her," said Jennie.

"I wish that I lived in San Francisco," said Miss Kent in a little quivering voice.

"You can call upon me any time, if you need anything."

Jennie in convulsions.

"If you will go to California with me, Miss Kent, Ill wait another week."

"Why, Mr. Lansing, what do you mean? What would folks say?" she said.

"We don't care for folks," said Mark. "If you will go, we will have a house as pleasant as money can make it. You shall have birds and flowers and horses, all the scientific monthlies that you want, deuced if you shan't, and you shall never sew another stitch for anybody but me. Will you be my wife?"

Just then Jennie and I stepped up another peg, and there was that old maid who would not marry the best man that ever lived, hugged close to the man's breast who wouldn't marry the best woman that ever lived, not even to save her life. We came away then, but my opinion is that they remained in just that position till we rang the bell about half an hour later.

"How did you know?" I asked of Jennie.

"My dear," she answered, "my whole reliance was upon human nature, and let me tell you, dear goosie, whatever else may fail, that never does!"

"Why, Miss Kent, what makes your face so very red?" inquired Jennie upon entering, "and Cousin Mark, how strangely you look! You hair is all mussed up."

"And I hope to have it mussed up often," said Cousin Mark boldly. "Miss Kent and I are to be married this week."

Jennie laughed until her face was purple, and when I went up stairs Miss Kent was pounding her back.—Montreal Star.

FIRST SIGHT OF A TRAIN.—A country boy who was brought up in a remote region of Scotland had occasion to accompany his father to a village near which a branch line of railway passes. The morning after his arrival, when sauntering in the garden behind the house in which they were staying, he beheld, with wondering eyes, a train go by. For a moment he stood staring at it with astonishment, and then, running into the house, he said: "Father, father, come oot! There's a smiddy ran off wi' a row o' houses, an' its awa' doon by the back o' the town."—London Telegraph.

Dreamland.

It is a land not far from us, where souls
May sometimes walk in sleep—a dim, vast land
Older than Egypt, full of rivers spanned
With mist; broad meads it hath and moonlit knolls,
Whereon the purple asphodel unrolls,
And many a pale death-flower; wide open stand
Its gates all night, whence dreams in riotous band
Press, thronging, to the couch of sleep, till tolls
The matin bell; then nimble as a thought,
All vanish, save some luckless elf in nets
More fine than Queen Mab's eyelash, tripped and caught.
O strange, mad sprites, whom fantasy begets,
Ye bring the dead back, ye do strong hearts break
For some lost treasure, some sweet memory's sake.
—William Prescott Foster, in the Century.

HOW THE "STAR SPANGLED BANNER" WAS WRITTEN.

There have appeared during the last few years, in various periodicals and daily papers, articles purporting to give an absolutely true account of the circumstances under which the words of the "Star Spangled Banner" were written and the occurrences which led to their composition by young Francis Scott Key of Maryland. Each of these articles has been more or less correct in its statements, the best of them having appeared in the Youth's Companion several years ago. Not one of them however, gives the story in its entirety, as it is held in the two families by whom it is treasured with pardonable pride, as linking their names with the far-off past of their country's struggles for independence, and with the composition of what may be called her national song.

As a direct descendant of the family to a member of which the song was dedicated by Francis Key, I have had the story told me many times by those who knew well and delighted in relating every incident of it; beside which I possess family papers and letters giving many little items, interesting and amusing, connected with it, which have certainly never been published.

There resided in Upper Marlborough, Prince George's county, Md., in the early part of the century, an old gentleman—a physician—Dr. William Beanes. He was a member of one of the oldest families in Maryland, a family whose estate was under deed of gift from Lord Baltimore in 1604. That deed—a quaint old paper—is still in existence. Dr. Beanes was a man known throughout his state for his sterling qualities and large-hearted hospitality, as well as for many eccentricities and a somewhat quick temper. He is thus described to me by a very charming aged lady, who as a child knew him well and who is yet living. She adds: "Dr. Beanes was my father's lifelong friend, as well as our family physician. He was the kindest and most lovable of men, and wonderfully patient and gentle with little children, to whom he was devoted; and he was the only gentleman I ever knew who invariably wore ruffled shirts."

The doctor's hospitality was perhaps the best known, as it is to-day the best remembered, of his traits. Even in those days, when hospitality was—especially in Maryland and Virginia—so marked a characteristic of the people, Dr. Beanes was considered remarkable for the heartiness of the welcome which he extended to strangers as well as friends. A doubt was often merrily expressed by his friends whether if his Satanic majesty himself had presented himself at the door the old gentleman might not have asked him to walk in and rest, and take a glass of wine. They entertained, however, not the slightest doubt that had the fiend proved a genial and gentlemanly personage, Dr. Beanes would have joined in the proffered refreshment, would have chatted and joked, and might so far have forgotten himself as to invite him to call again.

Beyond question Dr. Beanes loved the land of his birth. There are instances in his life which evidenced this fact. Yet it was quite impossible for him to be anything but courteous and hospitable to the officers of the British vessels lying at anchor in the river near the family plantation, whenever they came on shore. They were gentlemen, they were genial companions; they liked a joke, enjoyed a good story, and they also greatly enjoyed the doctor's rich dinners and fine old wines; and in spite of such trifles as differences of political opinions and existing warfare between their respective countries, the old man liked and cordially entertained them.

It came to pass one afternoon—the memorable 14th of September, 1814—that a party of officers from Admiral Cockburn's ships, then lying at the mouth of the Petuxent river, whose waters washed the shore of the Beanes family plantation, were dining with the doctor.

Over their wine these gentlemen lingered longer than usual, and must have indulged rather freely and talked somewhat recklessly. They were aware that the bombardment of Fort McHenry was decided on for that very night, and after leaving Dr. Beanes's house to return to the ship, it occurred to them that they had very nearly if not quite betrayed what was to take place. To say the least, they felt that they had talked more than was prudent. If they had done so, however, the doctor had not fully understood the matter; for he had taken no alarm as to that or any immediate action on the part of the British.

They returned to the house where they had so lately been entertained and made the old gentleman their prisoner. It is a fact that finding him preparing to retire, they gave him scant time for re-dressing, and actually carried him off without his wig or spectacles.

Now Frank Key, a young lawyer, one of his near neighbors, and a relative by marriage, was one of the first notified of his dilemma. He lost no time in applying—under flag of truce—to Admiral Cockburn, on board his vessel, for the doctor's release. Instead, however, of securing his old friend's liberty, he was himself detained a prisoner during the bombardment then just beginning, and which lasted till beyond midnight. The doctor and he were permitted to be together, and but for their restraint they were treated with perfect courtesy. I have never heard that either one of them ever bore the least personal resentment to their captors.

Frank Key watched as far as in the darkness of the night was possible the bombardment of the fort; but Dr. Beanes, with his aged sight and deprived of his glasses, was as one blind indeed. And all through the memorable night his oft-repeated question touched his young friend most deeply. "Is the flag yet flying?" were the words with which the old man constantly appealed to him; and when at earlier dawn it was seen that the flag did indeed still wave over McHenry, on a scrap of paper torn from his pocket note-book young Key wrote the words of the "Star Spangled Banner," and gave them to his old friend.

Later on, when first published, they were dedicated—as indeed seemed appropriate—to Dr. Beanes. The following morning both gentlemen were put ashore, and returned to their homes.

It is hardly necessary to say that from this adventure Dr. Beanes learned to restrict his love of entertaining, to some extent, to friends, and, at any rate, not to extend hospitality to British officers until peace should be declared, however delightful, as dinner companions, they might be. His experience was as long as he lived the theme of many a jest, which he always seemed to relish heartily.

It is related of his wife, who is described as one of the gentlest and sweetest of old ladies, that she particularly delighted to remark, whenever thereafter the doctor seemed about to indulge his slightly peppery temper: "My dear, I think I shall have to send for Admiral Cockburn."—K. D. Lawrence, in the New York Evening Post.

LATEST THING IN PARIS.

The girls are no longer the only attraction for the blase Parisian who frequents the cafe, for the Parisians have invented something novel in the advertising line. From 4 o'clock in the afternoon until 7, handsome, well-dressed men, in varnished boots, top hats and gray overcoats, promenade the main boulevards in couples, singing at the top of their voices, and in unison, the announcement of a good show at one of the leading music halls. They introduce popular airs into the spoken advertisement, and many of them are really happy in their selections, certainly far more so than the Salvation Army people.

As they approach, the blase boulevardier stops drinking and stares at the strange singers. He even allows his cigarette to go out. The milliner's girl stops and admires the men in the neat and fashionable attire. The pastry cook's boy, a true gamin of Paris, allows his hot dishes to get cold and forgets his customers as he listens to the tall gentlemen who sing advertisements on the boulevards. The policeman views them with stern interest, while the huckster and her little dog complain because it interferes with business.

On they go, walking and singing in good time. "To-night, at 8 o'clock, at the Folies Bergeres, Mlle Emilienne d'Alencon, in her new songs." This they repeat over 50 times. As a business improver the singing advertisement is said to be a great success. Paris once had a spoken newspaper, in the Athenee theatre, but it was not especially popular. The walking advertisements is the latest freak, and if the authorities do not interfere Paris will witness some queer things in this departure.

A bicycle firm in Paris has started out half a dozen girls, all good riders, and all wearing bloomers, which are exceeding tight fitting and loud in color. As the girls ride up in couples one wonders why such smart women should select the crowded boulevards for their afternoon ride. The mystery is soon solved. As they pass by a poster becomes visible. It is attached to the back of their tight-fitting corsage, and on it are inscribed in large characters the words: "I ride So and So's wheel."

Advertising in newspapers is expensive in Paris, and people don't read the advertisements in French papers as they do in America. The complete outfit of the man who sings advertisements on the boulevard costs only $15, and includes patent leather boots, a tall silk hat, a light overcoat and a black frock suit. They receive $2 each per day. As there are likely to be many imitators, the police are hunting up some old law or decree which will enable them to put a stop to what they say is a public nuisance.—New York World.

Ratiocination.

Rector—"Duggan, attention! As you're an old Balaklava soldier I am inclined to make allowances, but this is the third time I have seen you under the influence of drink. How is this?"

Sexton—"Well, you see, sir, when I go down town, one fellow says, "Duggan, will you have a drink?" and another says the same, and I get drunk without knowing it."

Rector—"But, Duggan, when I go down town, no one asks me to take a drink."

Sexton—"Yes, but you're not nearly such a popular man, you see."—Punch.

POTATOES AN UNHEALTHY FOOD.—John Gilmer Speed, Dr. Cyrus Edson (ex-President of the New York Board of Health) and Mrs. S. T. Rorer learnedly discuss "The Potato as a Daily Diet," in the November Ladies' Home Journal, and pretty conclusively prove that the humble but popular tuber is not a healthful article of food. Mr. Speed asserts that the potato as a food is not nearly so valuable as we have very generally esteemed it to be. It is quite deficient in nitrogen, and as a sole diet is therefore unsuitable. It is hard to digest, and therefore should be partaken of very sparingly save by all those who live active lives out-of-doors.

PALMER NEWS.

REGARDING OUR FORESTS.

An Instructive Talk About the Abuse and Use of Trees.

The second farmers' institute of the season was held in the district court room Tuesday forenoon. The attendance was very poor, but the subject was one of unusual interest. President A. D. Norcross opened the meeting and called attention to the subject, "Our Forests," in a few well chosen words. He introduced O. S. Senter of Northampton, who was the speaker of the day. Mr. Senter said: "There are three great subjects which are of interest to the Massachusetts farmer to-day, the gypsy moth, tuberculosis, and our forests. Few subjects can be named of more interest than the latter. We must consider their direct and indirect uses. The product of the forest is required in nearly all kinds of house and ship building, in making furniture, tools, and a variety of implements, but by far the greatest draft is for fuel. The best statistics show that the amount of wood used for fuel is about five times greater than that used for all other purposes. The amount annually used in lumber is about 250,000,000 feet; fences, 500,000,000; railroad construction, 560,000,000; charcoal, 250,000,000; fuel, 17,500,000,000 feet; besides this the product of about 10,000,000 acres is annually destroyed by fire. Our whole amount of wood and timber fit for use at the present time, exclusive of Alaska, is about 500,000,000 acres. The annual draft is about 400,000,000 acres. It will thus be seen that we are at the present time using nearly our whole product annually. The growth of timber is in a much smaller proportion, so that at the present rate we shall soon exhaust our supply. The damage to forest trees each year from the turpentine and tanning industries is also a large factor, which must be considered. It is surprising how our forests are being thoughtlessly slaughtered. It is a time when we must stop all waste and look the situation in the face, and the matter should be regulated by legislative action. In many of the states this has been done, but it is remarkable how slow Massachusetts has been in this matter. More care should be taken in stocking our libraries. In every library there should be a department stocked with books for the use of the farmers, and among them books on forestry.

This country should copy in this respect the countries of Europe. The people here are not less intelligent, but they seem to have given a surprisingly small amount of attention to forestry. Forests should be under proper supervision, and this should be attended to by the government. There should be frequent lectures on the subject in every community to arouse the people to a sense of necessity for action. Let us consider some of the ways of preserving and increasing our forests. One of the most necessary things is fencing. Cattle that graze should be carefully kept out of the forests. Small trees are continually springing up, and in a surprisingly few years they will grow to large size. Animals, especially in the spring, when the shoots are tender and sweet, sweep them up at one mouthful. The tree is thus destroyed, while the benefit to the animal is very small. In France and other foreign countries the forests are as carefully fenced as the fields and vineyards. Care should be taken in cutting trees. A judicious cutting is good for the forest. It allows the circulation of light and air, and in proportion increases the fertility of the soil. A good method is to cut the trees out in small circles. The bare places will be seeded by the trees around them, and in a short time there will be a new growth. Another good way is to cut the trees out in narrow strips, which works just as well. Care should be taken to cut only trees large enough for use as wood and lumber.

Many tracts of land in this state are considered as waste, land and the soil is so stony that it is practically impossible to cultivate it, and it is allowed to remain disused. Sow seeds on this land. Trees will spring up among the rocks, their roots will find a hold and will gather nourishment sufficient to insure their growth. Many places will be self seeding if the young trees are not destroyed. The influence of trees upon the climate is very great. The leaves gather cool moisture from the earth, which is constantly being thrown off in warm weather. The force and fury of wintry blasts is broken by them. Parts of the country where timber abounds have been found to be very much more even in the matter of climate than other parts similarly situated which are without timber.

Trees are the great natural reservoirs upon the surface of the earth. Their shade and brush gather moisture, letting it down into the earth as it is needed. They also attract the clouds and cause rainfalls where otherwise there would be none. This has been demonstrated in many parts of the country."

Many interesting theories and descriptions of the growth and habits of trees and their influence upon the climate and the water supply were given. A caution was given against placing too many trees in close proximity to the houses, but all were urged to plant trees of some kind in all available places. Much can be done with fruit trees if planted judiciously. Mr. Senter said in closing that he hoped on the occasion of his next visit to Palmer to see a demonstration of the effect of his lecture.

More About Palmer Schools.

The Palmer correspondent of the Citizen, Boston's weekly A. P. A. paper, who signs himself "Freedom," has another communication in last Saturday's issue of that paper, as follows:

The writer would suggest that Senator Roe, who has introduced a bill providing that "no member of a school board in any city or town of the Commonwealth shall, while serving on such board, be employed as a teacher in any public school," make his bill read "public or parochial" school; then the bill would interest the inhabitants of Palmer, who have in their midst a Protestant member of the school board whose term of office expires next March, and who has been employed as teacher in the parochial school in Three Rivers village, while acting as a member of the school committee.

Some of the intelligent people of Palmer understand that the parochial system is getting into our public schools, and can see the workings of the cunning hands of Rome, while equally as intelligent people are sleeping on, to be awakened by the A. P. A., who have entered the field for the good of the town, and are friendly to all loyal Americans; therefore, all loyal Americans should use them as friends.

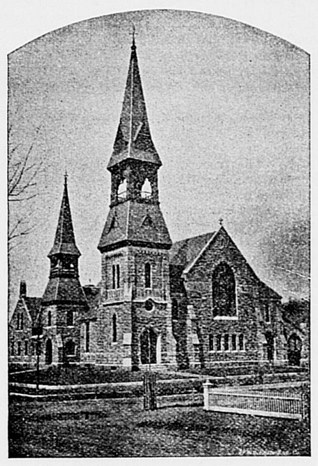
The part of the above which relates to the member of the school board belongs to one of those "important if true" stories which are to be found in every community, started by irresponsible persons or those who jump at conclusions and make no attempt to verify their statements. It is aimed at Mr. Ruggles of Three Rivers, and is true in all except two things—Mr. Ruggles has never taught in a parochial school, and his term of office on the school committee does not expire until 1897. In the fall of 1894 some members of the French Circle, a benevolent organization of Three Rivers, concluded that they would like to read and write English, and hired Mr. Ruggles to give them lessons; some could already read and write the language, and these, in addition to further perfecting themselves, studied arithmetic and English history. The members of this private class were from 18 to 24 or 26 years of age, and were given instruction three evenings a week in the vestry of the French Catholic church, and did not even meet in the rooms occupied by the parochial school. As to the statement in the last paragraph, the "intelligent people" of Palmer are perhaps as capable of judging as is "Freedom."

UNIVERSALISTS CELEBRATE

The 20th Anniversary of the Establishment of Regular Preaching Services in Palmer.

The people of St. Paul's Universalist church clebrated last evening the 20th anniversary of the establishment of regular preaching services of that denomination in Palmer. A supper was served bs the Ladies' society at 6, and the exercises of the evening began at 7.30 with a piano and violin duet by Miss Annie Fish and Miss Fannie Parmenter, after which Rev. H. F. Moulton read as a Scripture selection the one hundredth Psalm, and then offered prayer.

Judge George Robinson was then introduced and gave a historical address. We meet to-night to briefly review our work as a religious body, to recall and rejoice in some events which have advanced our interests, adding to our joy and usefulness; also to render tribute to the memory of some who were with us in faith and hope and endeavor, but who have been called to their eternal home. This is the 20th anniversary of the holding of continuous religious services which resulted in the formation of "St. Paul's Parish of Palmer," and other organizations intended to supplement the work and help realize the high purposes of the founders: The Sunday school, Ladies' Social Union, the Church, the United Workers, Patterson Club, Crescent Club, Young People's Christian Union, and the Eaton Club, each of which has contributed its part to bring Christian Universalism to its present condition.



St. Paul's Universalist Church.

In 1858 a society was formed and preaching established and maintained until the breaking out of the War of the Rebellion, when owing to unsettled business conditions the society thought best to suspend services. The meetings had been held in Antique Hall, on the site of the present Weeks House, with such preachers as "Father" Whittemore, H. R. Nye of Cincinnati, later of Springfield, John G. Adams of Worcester, John H. Willis, father of Albert H. Willis, recently of Palmer, C. N. Fay, D. D., and for permanent supply one half the time N. T. Wright of New Hampshire, father of Carrol D. Wright of Washington, the able statistician. Mr. Wright served for nearly two years. The active supporters of that early effort were C. C. Shaw, S. R. Lawrence, John A. Squier, Julius P. Shaw, F. J. Wassum, P. W. Webster, Bert H. Johnson, L. A. Bailey, James Gamwell, Marshall Fox, Henry Scism, Enoch Marshall and Daniel Granger of this village; Gamaliel Collins and E. G. Murdock of Thorndike; John S Green of Belchertown; Charles Fay, Daniel Foskit, Daniel G. Green and Hiram Newton of Monson; Abner Stebbins and Gilman Noyes of Brimfield, most of whom were blessed with wives who aided heartily in the good work. There were some who opposed the efforts of the new society, but the majority respected their right to worship according to the dictates of their own consciences, and gave substantial proof of their Catholicity. On one occasion the Baptist parish gave the use of its church for a fair and the Congregational parish opened its building for a meeting of the Union Association.

After the suspension of these earlier services meetings were rarely held, and with a few exceptions there were no Universalist preachings in Palmer until 1874, when they were revived, and the use of the court room was secured from time to time, until it was refused by the proprietor with the remark that he did not propose to be janitor for the Universalists. Services were held in various places for a time, until M. W. French bought the land where the present Memorial building stands and built a block containing two halls, in the smaller of which on February 13th, 1876, were held the services, the 20th anniversary of which we are celebrating to-night. Prof. W. R. Shipman of Tufts College preached in the morning and evening. The next Sunday a Sunday school was organized, George Robinson being chosen superintendent, J. H. Willis secretary and treasurer, and for teachers C. C. Shaw, Mrs. P. W. Webster, Mrs. Hannah Graves, O. M. Graves, Miss Whitcomb and H. H. Paine.

The parish was formed on the 8th of May 1876, the signers of the petition for a warrant being S. R. Lawrence, C. C. Shaw, J. A. Squier, F. J. Wassum, M. W. French, George Robinson, A. Pinney, O. M. Graves, H. A. Northrop, E. L. Davis, A. B. Cowan, J. F. Holbrook, H. H. Paine, Henry Scism, A. J. Northrop and W. B. Ham. The church was constituted May 28th, 1876, with 21 members: C. C. Shaw, Mary A. Shaw, Earl Guilford, Lucy M. Guilford, George Robinson, Joseph Taft, F. J. Wassum, William W. Leach, Orsan M. Graves, Hannah Graves, Maria Lawrence, S. R. Lawrence, Rufus F. Leach, Herbert A. Northrop, Josie Northrop, Carrie Holbroook, J. A. Squier, C. Warner, Charles Guilford and H. H. Paine; of these ten have died. The deacons chosen were C. C. Shaw and O. M. Graves, and the clerk George Robinson. The death of Mr. Shaw about two years later caused a vacancy in the office of deacon, and George Robinson was elected. In 1877 it was voted to settle a pastor, and a ballot showed every vote for Charles H. Eaton. He remained until 1881, and was succeeded by Rev. E. A. Perry, 1882-1886; Rev. F. W. Betts, 1887-87; Rev. J. F. Albion, 1890-91; Rev. H. F. Moulton, the present pastor. The church building was erected in 1879, the first rental of pews being March 29, 1880. In 1893, through the liberality of Mrs. C C.Shaw and Mr.and Mrs.WilliamMerriam, a parish house was presented to the society.

W. E. Stone, the treasurer of the parish, gave a review of the receipts for each of the 20 years. The total amount collected has been $36,614.41. The first year the amount was $1077, and last year $2553, the average being $1830. The treasurers have been A. H. Willis, 1876-81; S. W. French, 1881-83; W. W. Leach, 1883-89; A. Pinney, 1889-93; W. E. Stone, 1893 to the present time.

Letters of regret at being unable to be present were read from Rev. A. J. Patterson, D. D., W. C. Greene of Peace Dale, R. I., Prof. W. R. Shipman of Tufts College, Rev. Dr. Eaton of New York, M. W. French of Newtonville, Rev. F. W. Betts of Syracuse, N. Y., Rev. J. F. Albion of Malden, Rev. Charles Conklin of Springfield, Rev. Harry Blackford of Monson. Remarks were made by A. H. Willis, O. M. Graves and G. F. Sedgwick.

The Ladies' Social Union was represented by Mrs. H. F. Moulton, who read a short paper. She said that the society was organized April 19, 1876, with 31 ladies and 15 gentlemen as members. For the first few years the socials were held in the homes of the members, and some in halls. The receipts for the first year of work were $459 74. The first annual meeting was held with Mrs. P. W. Webster April 11, 1877. In 1879 the Union bought the carpeting for the church, costing $621.87, of which 132 50 was given by Andrew Pinney. It also purchased the pulpit furniture, costing $200, and the 69 cushions for the pews costing $430.50. In 1882 the Union furnished the parlor with sofas and chairs, costing $160. The ladies have received within twenty years as receipts $7,903 69.

Illegal Liquor Peddlers Settle.

Vincent Steke and Willie Krejnicky, the West Springfield Polanders who were caught peddling beer in Three Rivers on Saturday, the 1st, pleaded guilty in the district court last Saturday and settled to the tune of $50 each. They claimed that they supposed they had a right to take orders and deliver the stuff, but probably will know better now, and will make their next attempt where there are less vigilant officers.

A raid was made Sunday afternoon on the place kept by William Connolly at Thorndike, and two quarts of whisky was captured. Come and hear the facts where no-license has been thoroughly tried.

A warning of a heavy wind, liable to reach a velocity of 60 miles an hour, was telegraphed from the weather bureau at Washington to New England last Friday night. The blow was scheduled to make its appearance between 8 and 10 in the evening, but while there was no lack of wind the 60 miles an hour was not even approached, for which Palmer people were thankful.

At the last state convention of the W. C. T. U. the proposition to have a branch headquarters for the three western counties was decided adversely, but it was voted to have the various branches visited by someone from the state headquarters, and in accordance with this decision Mrs. S. She gave an account of the work being done throughout the state, and tried to bring the local branch into closer contact with the headquarters at Boston.

D. G. Buskey and Rev. C. R. Minard had a narrow escape from injury in a runaway on Tuesday afternoon. They had started for Monson with a horse owned by D. L. Bodfish, which became frightened at a train while crossing the Main street bridge over the tracks, and jumped, breaking one of the shafts. This let the sleigh onto her heels, and she started to run. The occupants of the sleigh was soon thrown out, but fortunately were not injured. The horse left the sleigh on the Nelson flat, after coming in contact with C. F. Grosvenor's heavy truck sleigh, and then ran about half way to Monson.

Rain last Sunday and snow in the evening covered the sidewalks with a coating of ice which made pedestrianism extremely difficult and dangerous Monday morning, but made good sleighing for a little time. Tuesday forenoon there was a slight taste of a blizzard, but it lasted only a few minutes fortunately, as the snow fell very fast, accompanied by a high wind. Yesterday four or five inches of heavy snow fell, followed by a slight rain and a freeze last night, making excellent sleighing to-day, though rather rough. It is not likely to last long, however, and those who haven't had a sleigh ride but wish one had better take advantage of the condition of affairs at once.

Deputy Sheriff Studley went to Concord this afternoon, to be on hand to-morrow morning when Burnell, one of the young fellows who last summer burglarized the Weeks House, is released. It will be remembered that two young fellows who stopped at the hotel over night was suspected of doing the job, and a large number of skeleton keys were found in their possession. They denied the charge, and nothing was found to fasten the guilt on them. They were wanted in Springfield, however, for jobs done there, and were turned over to the Springfield police, afterward confessing that they did the job at the Weeks House here. The other man's time is not yet out, but Burnell will be brought here and held for the Weeks House job.

Converse, late of Brimfield. Assignment of homestead was allowed in the estate of John F. Lombard, late of Brimfield. The children will dance from 8 to 9 o'clock, and from that time till 12 there will be an opportunity for dancing by all those holding tickets to the floor. This is not to be an exhibition of fancy dancing, but simply a reception given by the class and a pleasant occasion where the children can dance the steps they have learned, both for their own pleasure and that of their friends. There will be music by the Springfield Orchestral Club, and refreshments will be served in the banquet hall above. General admission to the gallery, 25 cents; tickets to floor, $1, Floor director, C. District Court.

Joseph Harness of West Brimfield was sent up for three months last Saturday because of drunkenness.

On Monday Joseph Touchyk of Bondsville paid a fine of $5 for drunkenness.

On Tuesday Frederick Holt of Bondsville was charged with an assault. Holt is about 15 years old, and had been confined to his room by lameness, amusing himself meanwhile by shooting an air-gun. He directed his shots at the house occupied by Mrs. Anna Touchyk, opposite, and when she came out to see what was striking the house a shot hit her on the left temple, breaking the skin. The boy did not know he had hit her, but pleaded guilty and the case was continued until the 29th. There has been considerable complaint about the use of these guns in Bondsville.

An Arabian named Andros was in court yesterday charged with knocking a woman down in South Monson on the 22d of January and taking $23.75 from her. The warrant for his arrest was placed in the hands of Officer Studley, who was informed that his man lived in Worcester; he went there and left the warrant with the officers there, but Wednesday found his man on Park street in this village. The case came up this morning.

Five children of from 4 to 12 years of age,—Mary, Celia, Delia, Kate and Lillian Cunniff,—were in court yesterday as neglected, but on the expressed willingness of their grandfather, James Cunniff of Westfield, to take and care for them, they were given into his custody and the case continued until the 29th.

Mrs. Addie Chase Smith and Miss Frank Libby, the artists in Wednesday evening's entertainment, were the guests of Rev. and Mrs. Geo. M. Gerrish during their stay in town.

The entertainment given at the Congregational church on Wednesday evening was a grand success. A large and appreciative audience were present and gave the artists a warm reception. Mrs. Addie Chase Smith as a reciter caught the attention of the audience and held it throughout the entertainment. She has a spendid voice and can be heard distinctly. She is in fact an artist of the first rank. Miss Annie Frank Libby, the harp soloist, was well worth the price of admission alone. She played with ease and grace and showed herself to be a master of her beautiful instrument. Both ladies were repeatedly recalled and responded liberally. The society will net a good sum by the same. Much credit is due Mr. and Mrs. Gerrish for the success of the affair, as they worked hard to make it what it was, a success, financially and otherwise.

Death of a Well-known Brimfield Woman.

Mrs. Augusta A. Ward, the wife of Simon B. Ward, died at her home in Brimfield Sunday, Feb. 2, after a painful illness of over six weeks. Her death was due to the acute development of liver and stomach trouble, from which she had suffered to some extent for a number of years. Mrs. Ward was born in Brimfield March 28, 1822, and was a member of a well-known family. She was the daughter of Julius Ward and grand-daughter of Christopher Ward, a man of local fame and a soldier who served during the entire Revolutionary war.

In her girlhood Mrs. Ward attended the Quaboag Institute at Warren, where she was a schoolmate of Lucy Stone, the principal of the school at that time being Mrs. Cutter. As a girl Mrs. Ward was unusually fond of study and pursued studies by herself when denied the opportunities for the schooling she desired, and up to the time of her last illness she kept acquainted, through her choice of reading, with the progressive and best thought of the day. She was married Nov. 28, 1844, to Simon B. Ward of Charlton. Mr. and Mrs. Ward at first made their home in South Boston. They afterwards lived for several years in Southbridge and in Montpelier, Vt., moving to Brimfield about 30 years ago from their home in Cambridgeport.

Mrs. Ward was a woman of much ability, and during the early half of her married life she was able to engage in active work outside her own home; but she was supremely devoted to her family, and her life was mainly passed within the circle of home duties. Besides the members of her own family there are a great number of others who gratefully remember her interest and kind ministrations. Says one who had frequented her home from boyhood: "Her ministrations to others were so constant and so much a part of her nature that in later years she has been an example of patient, dutiful service that is rarely equalled." Mrs. Ward is held in grateful and affectionate remembrance by many of the teachers and pupils of the Hitchcock Free High School, who found a pleasant home in her family during their connection with the school. Besides a husband she leaves two daughters, Mrs. John H. Noyes and Mrs. Orus E. Parker of Brimfield, and a brother, Calvin M. Ward of Natick. The funeral service was conducted by Rev. W. K. Peirce, who dwelt upon Mrs. Ward's life as an example of devoted service add upon the courage and truth that sustained her through the sufferings of her last illness. In closing Mr. Pierce read the following selection, whose sentiment seems in peculiar accord with Mrs. Ward's belief and hopeful spirit: "They who have gone have really less to do with death than we who remain There is a buoyant sense of their release to the unknown, the untried. They are in the gracious presence of new conditions, new chances, new deeds. The miracle of creation has been wrought afresh for them, they have entered upon immortal youth; they have parted with age; they have turned their faces from death forever."

Funeral of Elijah Shaw.

The funeral of Elijah Shaw was the largest ever held in the town of Wales, and showed beyond doubt the high esteem felt by his friends, not only in Wales, but throughout the country where he was known. The exercises commenced at 2 p. m., and lasted until 5 o'clock. The services were opened by Rev. G. W. Davis, pastor of the Baptist church, where the funeral was held. The pastor of the Wales Methodist church offered prayer, after which Mr. Davis spoke.

He said that his intimate acquaintance with Mr. Shaw had extended over but a few months. During that time, however, he had made a study of the man's personality, and a careful examination of his past life. With all due deference to others who have done a life work, it is safe to say no life has been so intimately interwoven in the influences of the church and town as that of Elijah Shaw. Some months ago a teacher said that three little towns are grouped here, Wales, Holland, and Union, Ct. From these towns three of the most influential men in the country have gone out, Philip Armour and W. H. Howard being two of them. These men have gone among strangers and have grown up to name and fame, which is a remarkable thing. Another man should be added to the list. This man did not go away from Wales, but stayed in the place of his birth. The presence of this large concourse of people and the floral tributes show in part the high esteem felt for Mr. Shaw. It has been said that a prophet is not without honor except in his own country. This is well known to be true, and it means something when a great man remains in his own town. The result of a careful study of his life has led to this conclusion. He was a noble and remarkable personality, whose character is worthy of praise and honor. He seems to have been the "Grand Old Man" of Wales. Mr. Shaw started as a pioneer in business, travelling over large sections of this country. During all his success he seemed possessed with a feeling that he must do something for Wales, and the many business enterprises inaugurated in this town by him are a result of this idea. Mr. Davis quoted many expressions of sympathy which have come to the family from various parts of the country. Many of these are remarkable, coming as they have from men who knew Mr. Shaw only through business intercourse. It is unusual that a business man makes so great an impression upon his business acquaintances. When Mr. Davis's acquaintance with Mr. Shaw commenced he said, "I shall never get very near to his heart," but he did so in a few months. He had noticed that when Mr. Shaw had been travelling for business or pleasure he had invariably attempted to make his stopping places where he could be among religious people. He had an unusually large circle of acquaintances among religious men, and in his own town lived not only for business, but for the church. He built and presented to the society the church in which the services were being held. During his last illness Mr. Shaw showed great feeling for the church. His death-bed scene was beautiful, and was described by Mr. Davis. After a long period of unconsciousness Mr. Shaw roused up and called his friends and family around him. To all he gave a dying word and wise council, and was quite reconciled to his approaching death.

Rev. Mr. Smith of Worcester, formerly pastor of the Wales Baptist church, was the next speaker. Mr. Smith found it exceedingly difficult to speak. He had known and loved Mr. Shaw for a long period of years, and felt that his place was among the mourners rather than in the pulpit. Mr. Smith spoke feelingly of Mr. Shaw as a friend, and touched briefly upon his success in business He also spoke of his great love for the church, and the especial pride taken by him in the Sunday school. His home was to him the dearest spot on earth, and Mr. Smith's close connection with him enabled him to speak understandingly of his home life. Mr. Smith's farewell to his old friends was very touching, and closed his address.

The next speaker was Rev. Dr. Morehouse of New York. Dr. Morehouse also found himself in a difficult position, his deep regard for Mr. Shaw rendering it difficult for him to speak He spoke of the sorrow which had been brought to many hearts by the death of Mr Shaw, and said the sad news had reached to all parts of the country. He counted it a privilege to have been associated with Mr. Shaw, as he had been, in the work done at Shaw University, which was founded by Mr. Shaw. He took hold of this great enterprise at a critical moment, and while perhaps not its founder in the strictest interpretation of the word, made it possible to found the institution. At the time when he took hold of this work, it was in the nature of an experiment. His money and push made it what it is to-day, and he has nobly stood by the colored race.

President Charles F. Meserve of Shaw University was the next speaker, and he also paid a loving tribute to Mr. Shaw's memory. His address had more to do with Mr. Shaw's connection with the university, and the great good which it had been possible to accomplish through his assistance.

Honorable James H. Young, editor of the Raleigh Gazette, and a colored graduate of Shaw University, was the next speaker. He told of his long acquaintance with Mr. Shaw, and of the great love felt for him by himself and all his race. The good which has been accomplished by the university among the colored people was dwelt upon, and made by Mr. Young much more apparent to his hearers than it had been by any of the preceding speakers. The colored people love Massachusetts, because her people have done so much for them. None, however, have done so great work as Mr. Shaw, and the people of this section cannot understand the great love felt for him by members of the colored race. During the past 30 years nearly 10,000 colored boys and girls have passed through the university, which may serve as something of an illustration of the great work being done by this institution.

Mr. Young was followed by Prof. M. W. D. Norman, professor of theology at the university, and another colored graduate. He also described Mr. Shaw's connection with the university. He told how the deceased, soon after the war, was made acquainted with the attempt to found such a school at Raleigh, and the difficulty which was being experienced from lack of money. It was then that Mr. Shaw showed his love for his fellowmen, whether white or colored. He at once sent word to go ahead. The money needed would be guaranteed by him, and should he prolong if he had to mortgage his own home. This promise was kept, and as a result the university was established. The love of the colored race in the South for Mr. Shaw cannot be fully realized by northern people, but something of the good done by the institution may be known. After Mr. Norman's address the benediction was pronounced by Rev. Mr. Davis.

LEGISLATIVE MATTERS.

BOSTON, Feb. 12, 1896

The amount of business for the Legislature of 1896 cannot be determined exactly at present, but it looks as if it would fully equal that of last year, which was in advance of that of any previous year. It is a matter of comment, too, by those who are familiar with the quality of legislation, that the business this year contains many propositions of much importance. It is true that some measures are put in which there is reason to suspect are merely for blackmailing purposes, but the percentage of such matters must be trifling and of no more importance than such malicious efforts are in comparison with the vast amount of honest business in the commercial world. The figures which are given in certain departments of industrial development to show our progress in recent years might be duplicated easily by the figures showing the growth of the state as seen in the amount of business presented to the Legislature. More than this, the current fashion of sneering at this business has no foundation in common sense and would not be indulged in by men with a realizing sense of the magnitude and variety of the interests involved. The charge cannot be made without a wholesale indictment against the people of Massachusetts, and surely the people are few who would entertain such a charge as that. If it were possible to picture the growth of the state as revealed in its legislation a fascinating presentation could be made by the genius with an imagination vivid, true and broad enough to take in the facts which seem so dry to the ordinary reader, and infuse them with the genuine life of the state, thrilling at every point and full of good things for the entire mass of the people. Ours is a wonderful state when we study it aright, and if we paid a great deal more attention to it, instead of giving so much of our time to the evening whist table, we should be a great deal better off, and our better understanding would result in a better state.

Many labor bills have been introduced, and one of the most important is that which extends to all persons the act which forbids the employment of women and minors for over 10 hours a day in any manufacturing or mechanical establishment. This would be such an extension of the law that it would doubtless be vigorously opposed by corporation influence. But the laboring people have made their essential gains in late years only against such influence and of course they expect to encounter it once more. Very likely they will be beaten this year, but their success has been made only by constant agitation, and it remains to be seen whether they will continue to agitate on this line.

The screws are being prepared for the liquor sellers and drinkers, and the temperance people say that this Legislature is one of the best they have ever had at the state house.

The passage of the biennial amendment seems to be assured. The vote in the House on the question of ordering it to a third reading was 175 yeas to 54 nays and one pair. There are 131 members on record out of 137,—there being three vacancies. The efforts of Mr. Mellen of Worcester to interpose points of order were all overruled and fell to the ground after they had been hotly supported by himself, but had not been opposed by any member on the other side. The passage of the resolve will be due to the force of the appeal to refer the answer to the people and give them a chance to pass upon it after an agitation of 20 years. Quite a number of members who will vote against the amendment at the polls voted in favor of its passage, so that the vote does not represent the judgment of the House on the merits of the question, and ought not to be interpreted by the public as a legislative indorsement of the resolve by the requisite two-thirds vote. There is a strong conviction among the opponents of the amendment, which is admitted by some of its friends to be doubtless true, that the motive which is carrying the amendment through this year is very far from patriotism, and is nothing but the power of corporations which are sick of the legislation which they have to encounter at the state house every year and are determined to put an end to it. With the present amendment and the Legislature elected for two years the members could be handled a great deal easier than when they come fresh from the people every year. But many of the men who want biennial elections want also biennial sessions of the Legislature, and if they were secured then the corporations would have one year without fear of legislation in the interest of the people as a whole, but against them. That this is the real power behind this movement seems very plain to any one who will study the course of events for the last two years. The chapter is long, full of important incidents and highly interesting, and the train of events points directly to this conclusion, though it is, of course, impossible to gather positive evidence.

It is surprising to observe the amount of business which is brought to the Legislature from the cities of the state. They put a great deal more into the legislative hopper than they did 20 years ago. Why the local needs are so much more numerous and pressing than formerly perhaps the officials of the cities can tell, but of the fact there can be no doubt. Springfield, Worcester, Lowell, Fall River and others are frequently at the state house. They seem to be more disposed than ever to bring in petitions. The law to limit the debt of cities has been productive of a great deal of legislation, and the value of the law as a whole is open to serious question. The prospect is that the metropolitan water act will be followed by many suits and bills.

It is settled now that there will be sometime an equestrian statue of Gen. Joseph Hooker on the state house grounds, for the Senate has listened to glowing speeches in his honor and has adopted the resolve appropriating $50,000 for the statue. The House will concur without doubt, and then the question will arise who shall be next to receive the honor. If we don't look out the grounds about the state house will resemble a mass meeting, if all the statues are erected which people would like to see there. The House has taken from the files of last year the resolve appropriating money for statues of Gen. Butler and Wendell Phillips. If there is ever serious danger of a statue of Butler doubtless the proposition will call out some of the hottest remonstrances which were ever heard at the state house, for there are plenty of people who believe that they have excellent grounds for affirming that Butler was totally unworthy of any such honor, and if the proposition is pressed it would surely bring out a mass of testimony injurious to the reputation of the general. It may be all right to honor his name by one's self, but when it comes to the erection of a statue, there would be persistent resistance to any such official honor to one whom so many believe to be unworthy of it. There is evidence in existence which would throw doubt upon the worthiness of Butler to receive such honor. The state buried him handsomely at Lowell and that will probably be the end of her honors to him, for it would have been seemingly harsh to object to such recognition, when objection to a statue would be highly proper.

The woman suffragists are putting in their petitions by the large quantity, and the contest will be as warm as ever it was before the referendum, which was supposed to have settled the question. Whether the effect of the popular verdict will be evident in the disposition of the Legislature to debate the question cannot be predicted. for the members have not had any fight, except over biennials, but before the committees on constitutional amendments and election laws there will surely be the warmest kind of woman suffrage arguments.

The farmers are putting in their petitions for the restriction of the use of tuberculin, and several schemes are proposed. Some would extend the present restriction for one year, or to June 1, 1897, while others would extend it indefinitely. Others want to abolish the cattle commission altogether, while others wish to reduce its membership to three and thus get rid of the two members who are most obnoxious to the farmers. It is too early yet to tell how the question is going. The farmers have considerable legislation on hand this year, including double taxation and tuberculin. If they could be less disposed to be so unanimous for giving up a material part of their political power.

FINE PRINTED COTTONS.

The distinguished new things are here; but there are more to come At no time are all the new stuffs together; if they were you wouldn't have the patience to see them all.

We have been singularly fortunate in rich things this season. Singularly fortunate means that we have more than ever, and prettier. But while the variety is large the quantities in some cases are small, and once gone there'll be no duplicates.

If we could only tell of these stuffs fitly! Can't. Language has no color, types no grace. Therefore newspaper print can only hint of stuffs and their beauty. The eye must do the rest.

BUTTONS AND TRIMMINGS.

Good Furniture.

It is not necessarily high priced; neither do thoroughness of workmanship and design mean great expense.

We will not buy a piece of poorly constructed furniture at any price. Special attention is given to good cabinet work, good materials and finish, even in the lowest cost goods. We warrant every piece we sell, and should any prove unsatisfactory in any detail, we are ever ready to replace it with a new piece.

Every manufacturer selling us must stand back of his goods in like manner. In this way we have built up one of the largest furniture departments in New England, and our goods to-day are being sent into every town and city within a hundred miles of us.

We furnish a house throughout at the least possible cost.

Your Laundress' Back, and her time, are not the only things that you save, if she uses Pearline. You'll get your clothes washed without that ruinous rub, rub, rub that wears them out quickly. It's a gain for her and a gain for you, and they're washed just as safely as they could be with the best soap—only a great deal more easily. Gravel Cured.

(Philadelphia, Penn., Item.)

A healthier, heartier, happier man than John J. Neill, of 2437 North Eighth street, Philadelphia, could not be found in a day's search. The fact that he is still alive is a constant wonder to his friends.

In the fall of 1889 he began to suffer indescribable miseries from stone in the bladder. Consulting an eminent physician in Philadelphia, he was told that a surgical operation was necessary. So much did he dread the result, for if unsuccessful it meant death, that he put off the evil day as long as possible. While in this frame of mind, he heard of

Although disheartened, on July 1, 1893, he bought a bottle of it, and within a month had experienced beneficial results, and before he had finished the third bottle, the gravel was completely dissolved and his sufferings at an end.

Mr. Neill feels that he owes a lasting debt of gratitude to Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy, and for disorders of the bladder and urinary organs, says "it will effect a cure if one be possible."

Favorite Remedy is prescribed with unfailing success for rheumatism, dyspepsia and nervous troubles, in which it has cured many who were considered beyond the aid of medicine. All druggists, $1.

This it accomplishes because with its wonderful power as a blood purifier, Hood's Sarsaparilla gently tones and strengthens the stomach and digestive organs, invigorates the liver, creates an appetite, gives refreshing sleep, and raises the health tone. In cases of dyspepsia and indigestion it seems to have "a magic touch."

with severe pains across my shoulders, and great distress. I had violent nausea which would leave me very weak and faint, difficult to get my breath. These spells came oftener and more severe. I did not receive any lasting benefit from physicians, but found such happy effects from a trial of Hood's Sarsaparilla, that I took several bottles and mean to always keep it in the house. I am now able to do all my own work, which for six years I have been unable to do. My husband and son have also been greatly benefited by Hood's Sarsaparilla—for pains in the back, and after the grip. I gladly recommend this grand blood medicine." MRS. THEOLOGICAL CHANGES IN PALMER IN 20 YEARS.

Rev. H. F. Moulton, pastor of St. Paul's Universalist church, preached the following sermon last Sunday, in commemoration of the 20th anniversary of the establishment of regular preaching services of that denomination in Palmer:

"Every plant which my heavenly Father hath not planted shall be rooted up."—Matt. xv: 13.

Jesus gave to the world a great truth when He uttered these words. You remember He was speaking to His disciples; they had told Him that the Pharisees were offended because of His saying: "Not that which goeth into the mouth defileth a man, but that which cometh out of the mouth, this defileth man." Jesus was not troubled because of their offence. He knew that "they were men made up of error and enmity, mistake and malice." He knew that "their sect, and way and constitution were plants not of God's planting." All men who confide completely in God's wisdom, power and love never doubt for a moment that "every plant" which their Heavenly Father "hath not planted shall be rooted up."

If the past has any one lesson that is more important than the many lessons which it is asking us to learn, it is this: No plants—whatever their names or natures—will be allowed to grow forever unless they are of God's planting. The plants of error and evil may be permitted to grow for a time, but they are sure to be rooted up and destroyed after they have served their purpose, if they have a purpose, as they doubtless have if we see things rightly.

It is impossible for a gardener, no matter how careful he may be, to keep weeds out of a garden. However, the labor that roots up the weeds is not in vain; the gardener by so doing loosens the soil around vegetable plants, which permits the summer shower, sunshine and atmosphere to do their necessary and effectual work of growth and fruitage.

As we look over the world to-day we see the weeds of error and evil growing side by side with the plants of truth and virtue. All of this has a purpose. As we root up error and evil we come to appreciate and love, more completely than we could in any other way, the growth and fruitage of truth and virtue. We appreciate and love the things which we work for better than the things which fall into our hands by what is called good luck.

Perhaps in no avenue of the present is our text better illustrated and enforced than in the theological. There have been great changes in theological thought and opinions during the past quarter of a century.

"Chance and change are busy ever;
Man decays, and ages move."

Many plants, not of the Heavenly Father's planting, have been rooted up. This work of pulling up the weeds of theological error has been sometime looked upon with fear. It has been called the work of heresy, infidelity, and other names which bigots are so fond of using when persons do not think or act just as they do. Regardless of what men have said this work has gone on, and one by one the weeds of theological error have been rooted up. This work has its reward; those who have been engaged in it have more truth to love than they would if it had grown up without any thought or labor on the part of their human brains and hearts. God wants us to have the plants of truth in all their possible health, beauty and fruitage. We can have them only by coöperating with Him. God would have been glad, if the weeds of theological error had been rooted up and the plants of truth given their present opportunity in this community twenty years ago. But, these changes in the theological garden have come only as fast as people have labored with God in thought. The remaining weeds of error in theology will only be rooted up and the plants of truth allowed to grow with greater luxuriousness as people labor with God in thought, in the future.

Let us now briefly point out some of the important changes which have taken place in the theology of this village within the past twenty years.

"Our little systems have their day;
They have their day and cease to be;
They are but broken lights of Thee,
And Thou, O God, art more than they."

In the first place, a change has come over this community in its conception of God. Many of you can remember when God was thought of as a sovereign, as a great and mighty ruler; in these days very little, if anything was said about His fatherhood. But now, nothing worth discussing is said about sovereignty, but much about fatherhood. Everywhere we are daily hearing men speak of God. How do they speak of Him? Not as a God of anger and as one who rules for His own good pleasure, but as a God of love, who rules to bless His children.

Many years ago, we are told, a Universalist parish in New York city built a respectable church on Prince street, a little east of Broadway, and placed over the door this superscripton—"God is Love." About 1829 or 1830 this church was sold to Presbyterians, who, apparently supposing this superscription to be some Universalist motto plainly contrary to their creed, removed it and went on preaching their doctrines of predestination and damnation. It has taken several years for some to find that the words, "God is Love," are in the Fourth Gospel, but now "God is Love" is a common motto in "Orthodox" as in "Liberal" churches. Yes,

"God is love; His mercy brightens
All the part in which we rove;
Bliss He makes, and woe He lightens—
God is wisdom, God is love."

In the second place another change has come over this village in its conception of Jesus. He is not thought of as God as much as He was a few years ago. People are rapidly growing away from the doctrine of the trinity. This doctrine cannot be argued for—it is an impossibility to make three personalities as one person, yet as three persons. We know Christ not as God, but as the Son of God; our brother, who was human and divine like ourselves; a man, who had a clearer insight into things spiritual and a more perfect moral and religious character than any soul who has lived on earth. The life of Jesus shows plainly what a person can be who is one with God in spirit and purpose. To-day we pray:

"O Lord and Master of us all,
What'er our name or sign,
We own Thy sway, we hear Thy call,
We test our lives by Thine.

Deep strikes Thy roots, O Heavenly vine,
Within our earthly sod,
Most human and yet most divine,
The flower of man and God,"

In the third place, still another change has come over this town in its conception of destiny. Some of you will remember that it was thought by many that the "heathen" and "liberal" would go to hell after death. But now many of these same persons will grant a second probation to the heathen, and the probability that most Unitarians and Universalists are Christians enough to go to Heaven. The old doctrines affecting destiny—like total depravity, vicarious sacrifice, and hell—are no longer preachable. To-day we "trust the larger hope," and say with Whittier: "Father of all, thy erring child may be lost to himself, but never lost to Thee."

The chief cause of these changes in the conception of God, Jesus and destiny is perhaps largely to be accounted for in our new conception of the Bible. People are not reading the Bible as they once read it, as an infallible book although written by fallible men. They are now seeing the human and the divine in it, as well as in the souls of the men who wrote it. While the Bible is not to be taken as literally true in every particular, yet it is alive and aglow as no other Scriptures with thoughts and facts about God, Jesus and destiny, as revealed to us by some of the purest and holiest men that have ever felt the throbs of life or walked on holy earth. Truly, "Thy word is a lamp into my feet and a light to my path."

"How precious is the Book divine,
By inspiration given,
Bright as a lamp its doctrines shine,
To guide our souls to heaven."

We shall fail to do justice to the work of change which has taken place in the theological situation of this community if we did not mention the change of attitude of "Orthodoxy" toward "Liberalism." The attitude of Orthodoxy was not in the early days as friendly to Universalism as it is in this hour. What was the situation in the days of beginnings? The doctrines of Universalism were looked upon as errors of the deepest dye, even as immoral; the Universalists were not considered as Christians. Hot discussions prevailed, sometimes setting neighbors against each other with anger. The ministers, if on speaking terms, had no other relationship or fellowship one with the other. Perhaps this too strongly states the attitude of Orthodoxy in this village toward Universalism when it began to establish itself. But all this, if it ever existed here, has changed. Our doctrines differ but little from the common theological views in other churches; we are looked upon as Christians; our neighbors no longer get mad with us because we do not agree with them theologically; other ministers show a desire for the sweetest possible fellowship and coöperation with the minister of this church. Truly, the kingdom of Heaven has come into our midst faster than some of you dreamed it would twenty years ago.

It would be difficult to find this morning a believer in all of the "five points" of Calvinism. Probably there is is not one person in fifty who can recall them, even in so-called Calvinistic churches. What are they, after an old order? They are: Predestination, particular redemption, total depravity, irresistible grace, and the certain perseverance of the saints. Do any of you believe in these doctrines of the past ages? Do the so-called evangelicals believe in them? No, not many, if any. Those of you who have been to the White Mountains well remember that everyone was anxious to see the location of the old Willey House. You remember how you looked down, many hundred feet, from the observation car, to catch a glimpse of it in the ravine. One who still clings to the "Old Theology" of twenty, fifty or one hundred years ago, is like a person who lives in an old Willey House all his days, without climbing to the sides or to the mountain peaks which surround him, where grand and fascinating outlooks may be enjoyed.

Oh, how one's thought is enlarged and changed who journeys occasionally from the valleys and the lowlands to the hills, the highlands of nature. He looks out as it were upon a new universe, with scenes and pleasures never dreamed of by him when living within the shadows. So with a soul, how thought is enlarged and changed when one journeys from the lowlands of Calvinism to the highlands of Universalism. He sees, as it were, a new God, and Christ; a new destiny and Bible,—a new church. He experiences a joy, comfort and hope never dreamed of in the old days. Oh, if it be possible may we climb to higher theological peaks than those on which we stand to-day? James Russell Lowell once said: "Theology will find out in good time that there is no atheism at once so stupid and so harmful as the fancying God to be afraid of knowledge, with which he has enabled man to equip himself." Let us not be afraid of an enlarged theological knowedge.

"By knowledge we do learn ourselves to know,
And what to man and God we owe."

DR. GREENE'S NERVURA.

Alexander Salvini, the Great Actor, Says Dr. Greene's Nervura Cures.

What he Says Means Health to You if You Use This Grandest and Surest of all Medicines, Dr. Greene's Nervura.

ALEXANDER SALVINI.

The word of an illustrious actor, like that of a great general or statesman, commands the attention of the world.

Alexander Salvina, son of the greatest actor that ever lived, is rapidly taking his father's place in the minds and hearts of the people. Every word of his, therefore, like the utterances of Jefferson or Irving, whom everybody honors and reveres, will be read with deep interest and profoundest attention by all.

Mr. Salvina writes to the people:—

"Traveling as I do, I cannot fail to notice the great use of Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy, and especially among my friends and acquaintances.

"From my own experience, I can strongly recommend it as a most excellent and reliable family remedy, especially for rheumatism and neuralgia, nervousness and all nervous affections, which illness, in our profession, we are most liable to contract."

Weak nerves, poor blood, low vitality, rheumatism and neuralgia, are the bane of life, the thief of comfort, the destroyer of happiness. It is the height of folly to suffer when a cure is easy, sure and speedy by using Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy. Use this great and wonderful remedy and the nervous, irritable, weak and trembling feelings will disappear; your sleep will be natural, calm, restful, and you will wake mornings feeling strong and vigorous instead of tired and exhausted; all gloomy depression and sense of anxiety will fade from the mind; your nerves will become strong and steady as steel, your strength, energy and ambition will be restored, and perfect health take the place of weakness and debility.

This remarkable discovery, Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy, should not be classed with ordinary patent medicines. It is the prescription of the most successful specialist in nervous and chronic diseases, Dr. Greene, of 34 Temple Place, Boston, Mass., and he can be consulted by all without charge, personally or by letter.

LOADS ICE WILL BEAR.

"The army rules," says engineering mechanics, "are that two-inch ice will sustain a man or properly spaced infantry; four-inch ice will carry a man on horseback, or calvary or light guns; six-inch ice, heavy field guns, such as 80-pounders; eight-inch ice, a battery of artillery, with carriages and horses, but not over 1000 pounds per square foot on sledges; and 10-inch ice sustains an army of an innumerable multitude. On 15-inch ice railroad tracks are often laid and operated for months, and ice two feet thick withstood the impact of a loaded passenger car after a 60-foot fall (or perhaps 1500 tons,) but broke under that of the locomotive and tender (or perhaps 3000 foot tons). Trautwine gives the crushing strength of firm ice as 167-250 pounds per square inch. Col. Ludlow, in his experiments in 1881, on 6 12-inch cubes, found 292-889 pounds for pure hard ice and 222 820 pounds for inferior grades, and on the Delaware river 700 pounds for clear ice and 400 pounds or less for ice near the mouth, where it is more or less disintegrated by the action of salt water, etc. Experiments of Gzowski gave 208 pounds; those of others 310-350 pounds. The tensile strength was found by German experiments to be 142-223 pounds per square inch. The shearing strength has been given as 75 119 pounds per square inch. The average specific gravity of ice is .92. In freezing water increases in volumn from 1-9 to 1-18, or an average of 1-11; when floating 11-12 is immersed."

In the Firelight.

The fire upon the hearth is low,
And there is stillness everywhere,
And, like winged spirits, here and there
The firelight shadows fluttering go.
And as the shadows round me creep,
A childish treble breaks the gloom,
And softly from the further room
Comes "Now I lay me down to sleep."

And somehow, with that little prayer
And that sweet treble in my ears,
My thought goes back to distant years,
And lingers with a dear one there;
And as I hear my child's amen,
My mother's faith comes back to me—
Crouched at her side I seem to be,
And mother holds my hands again.

Oh, for an hour in that dear place!
Oh, for the peace of that dear time!
Oh, for that childish trust sublime!
Oh, for a glimpse of mother's face!
Yet, as the shadows round me creep,
I do not seem to be alone—
Sweet magic of that treble tone
And, "Now I lay me down to sleep."

—Eugene Field.

PLAYING FOR LIFE.

When Gen. Early made his great raid on Washington, I was scouting between his advance and the city and was captured within the city limits twenty-four hours before his battle-flags appeared in sight. I was dressed in citizen's clothes, pretended to be deaf and dumb and claimed to have been driven out of Richmond because I had written threatening letters to Jefferson Davis.

I had been inside the fortifications for half a day, and was slowly working out when a couple of young men, both of whom were considerably the worse for liquor, halted me and wanted to fight. I had a pencil and a block of paper with me, and I wrote:

"I am deaf and dumb."

That made no difference with them. Indeed, they declared that it would be a novel idea to lick a deaf and dumb man, and one of them gave me a cuff on the ear.

In those days I weighed 160 pounds, and had the muscle of a prize fighter. I tried to get away from them without further trouble, but when they seemed determined to have a row I gave them all they wanted, and wasn't many minutes about it. A crowd of soldiers and civilians collected, the provost guard came up, and the result was as I had anticipated. I was arrested and carried off to a guard-house. One of the young men who afterward turned out to be related to a member of the cabinet, followed me to the office of the provost marshal, and charged me with being a spy. No one seemed to entertain a doubt that I was deaf and dumb as I claimed, and my examination was carried on in writing. I was asked my name, age, where born, and a hundred other questions, and then searched. They found nothing on me of a criminating nature, and I reasoned that I would be detained until after the excitement had passed and then turned loose.

After being detained three days, an officer entered my quarters one morning and said to me:

"Well, dummy, you can pack up and get out."

The minute I heard his step outside I was on my guard, but he spoke in such a natural tone that I came near giving myself away. On three different occasions during the war I played the part of a deaf and dumb man, and I tell you it takes all the nerve and presence of mind a man can call up. I sat facing the door, and, while I heard his words, I made no movement. He came closer to me and said:

"Come, pack up your traps, you are to be turned loose."

I looked him straight in the eyes without winking, after a bit a look of chagrin stole over his face, and he motioned for me to follow him. He took me to the provost martial's office, and I was ushered into a private room where the marshal and three or four other officials were seated. On the way to the office, as we crossed a wide street, the officer suddenly exclaimed:

"There's a runaway horse—look out!"

If I hadn't been expecting some such thing on his part I must have betrayed myself. As I gave no sign, continuing on with my head down, I heard him growling:

"They think they've got a sucker, but they'll find out their mistake!"

I entered the office, knowing that every trick would be resorted to to break me down, and my nerves were braced up as if to charge a battery. I was left standing by the door for a moment, when one of the officials looked up and quietly said:

"'Take a seat, sir, and we'll attend to you in a moment."

I made no move, but looked around the room in a stupid sort of way. I was looking out of the window on to a roof when the same official said:

"You may come forward and take this chair."

I stood like a stone, and he rose up, came over to me, and led me to a chair at the table. When I was seated one of the others remarked:

"Write your name, age and last place of residence on a piece of paper." This was trick number three, and it failed as the others had done. By and by the marshal wrote on a slip of paper:

"Who are you, and where from?"

"I am Charles Jones, of Richmond."

"But you are a Union man?" suggested one of the officers aloud.

I saw his lips move, but he got no sign from me. The examination continued in this manner for a full hour, the men using every artifice to trap me, but they failed to score a single point. I knew they would reserve the sharpest trick to the last, and was therefore nerved up for it. At length the marshal pushed back his chair, pointed his finger at my breast and angrily exclaimed:

"Where did that Confederate button come from?"

It was another failure. Then he turned to his companions and said:

"Gentlemen, it's no use, The man is certainly deaf and dumb and a d—n fool besides!"

"We have wasted our time," replied a second. "He is not only what he claims to be, but may be of great service to us. I'll have the officer take him over to the secretary of war."

"I guess I will," said the officer, and he rang a bell, and I heard the door open. Then he turned to me, careless as you please, and said:

"Go with the officer!"

It was their last shot. I never moved until the officer approached and placed his hand on me. I was taken back to the guard house, kept a prisoner for another week, and then the disgusted marshal turned me loose in the streets.—The Advocate.

SHE DIDN'T KNOW.

"You are so late."

It was nearly one o'clock in the morning, and Mrs. Dimpleton looked reproachfully at her husband, who but a moment before had stealthily entered the house. Dimpleton turned quickly, and putting his hand under his wife's chin, lifted her rueful face to his own and then put his arms around her.

"Ah, my dear, he said softly, "do you suppose I have been happy away from you? When I met Winkleton, purely by chance, and he invited me to spend the evening with him, it took a great deal of will power, I can assure you, to accept the invitation. It was only the thought of business, and that it really meant more for you in the end, that compelled me to. How unhappy I was as we bought the tickets and entered the theatre. Your face was constantly before me. How I longed to tear myself away from that brilliant scene and follow the promptings of my heart. I applauded mechanically, my laugh was forced, and then at the supper, afterwards, how miserable I was. I pictured you sitting here alone without me. I—"

"But I wasn't alone," interpolated Mrs Dimpleton.

"Not alone!" echoed her husband. "Who on earth was with you?"

His wife smiled loftily, as she replied:—

"No one has been with me, strictly speaking. Only if I had known that you were going to be so late, I would have stayed at my club half an hour longer."—Tom Masson, in Truth.

Abraham and Ephraim.

He solemnized industriously in his didactic way,
And moralized momentously with Ephriam every day,
And taught by tale and proverb and by every good device
The virtueness of virtue and the viciousness of vice.

His hortatory homilies intended to impress
The rightfulness of righteousness, the sin of sinfulness,
Were ever hurled at Ephraim throughout the whole year long,
That he might rightly comprehend the wrongfulness of wrong.

"A youth can grow up virtuous if we but pay the price;
If we but saturate his soul with showers of advice;
If we instil," said Abraham, "perpetual truth in him"—
And so in truth perpetually he soaked young Ephraim.

The youth absorbed a sermon every morning ere he ate,
On the awful reprobation of the awful reprobate;
And he swallowed moral theses that were meant to edify,
And he masticated maxims with his gingerbread and pie.

And 'twixt breakfast time and dinner the iniquity of sin
Was taught to him industriously and patiently rubbed in,
The turpidness of turpidity was duly analyzed,
And the evil of depravity was loudly advertised.

And then right after dinner the enormity of crime
And the wrong of immorality was preached till supper time,
Then Abraham would solemnize through all the evening hours,
And drench young Ephraim's consciousness in moralistic showers.

Thus through cumulative precept did old Abraham desire
Accumulative virtue should young Ephraim acquire;
He taught him virtue endlessly, and waited long to see
How supurlatively virtuous young Ephraim would be.

Thus maxim-goaded Ephraim found rightousness a bore,
For salve is but an irritant when jammed into a sore;
Even bread is innutritious if you absolutely cram
An indiscriminate bakery down the bursting diaphragm.

Thus by hortatory homilies did Abraham impress
The wrongfulness of rightousness, and the good of sinfulness;
And taught by tale and proverb and by every good device,
The viciousness of virtue and the virtuousness of vice.

Hence, Ephraim lived a reckless life and died a felon's death,
But gave this vindication with his latest dying breath:
"I have been sermonized to death; I die, to speak precise,
An unprotected victim of perpetual advice."

THE EXINGTON BANK.

"Anstruther," said Hardy, "you put a very searching question."

"No doubt," I answered. "But I thought among friends"—

"Even among friends," rejoined he, "I consider that to ask a hypnotist whether his feats of skill are merely deceptions is a fairly searching question. Still, I shall answer you if you will agree that what I say shall be in confidence."

"Agreed."

"Frankly, then," said Hardy, "some of them are, and some are not. You see, a public hypnotist is in a peculiar position. I profess to use a subject, and could if I pleased take one about with me. But the British public pronounce that collusion, and will have none of it. On the other hand, they are disappointed if I don't give some remarkable manifestation every night. It does not follow that I can find a subject, so I have to be provided against emergencies."

"Was your 'emergency man,' if I may be allowed the expression, performing tonight?"

"I don't mind admitting that he was," said Hardy, with an ingenious smile.

"Then I guess he was the man who sang a comic song and pretended to feed a baby."

"You've hit it," assented Hardy, placidly. "Then you were hard pressed, to-night?"

"I was, but need not have been," said he. "I told you two of our difficulties. We are not allowed our own medium, and sometimes cannot chance on another. There is still a third hardship. Sometimes the man is there, and I can't make use of him."

"Why not?"

"Because a man may be an excellent subject, and object to be exhibited on a public platform. Suppose he is a vicar. You can't make him sing a comic song before his congregation. I could compel him to do it, but the attendances would drop off in consequence."

"I think they might," I assented laughing.

"At least, you could not expect vicars to come. But is our vicar a subject?"

"Not that I know," said Hardy, slowly, as he lit another cigar. "But there was a most interesting subject present to-night, if I could only used him."

"Really," I said, "how exciting! Who was he?"

"Never saw him in my life before," replied he carelessly, "but I can tell you this: I had the utmost difficulty to prevent him from betraying himself to-night. I really had to forbid him to move, or he would have come to me on the platform, and then you would have seen something."

"And to think you will never see him again."

"As to that, if I wanted to see him I could bring him here in five minutes, or as quick as he could come. I don't know where he lives, you know."

"I simply don't believe it," I answered, "or rather he is, I suppose, one of your emergencies for which you have provided."

Hardy laughed.

"My dear Anstruther, have I not trouble enough over my performances all day without arranging others at night? Do you think I would not rather have a quiet talk about old times than spend a night in bamboozling you? Besides, you introduced the subject yourself."

"So I did," I assented, apologetically, "but I can't believe"—

"I don't want you to believe; I only tell you that I could order that man to come here if I like, get him to do what I like, and send him back again to bed without his knowing in the morning what had happened to him."

"Well, do it, then."

"To oblige you I don't mind trying. Mind, I shall not put much pressure on him. He is an old man, and, if he is far away, won't come. Still, if he does come, that you may not say I went to fetch him, lock me in the bedroom for twenty minutes. If he is not here by then, he is too far off to come."

I examined the bedroom. It had no door except that into the passage. I thought escape by the window was impossible, for I knew the hotel well; but to make sure I rang for the waiter after locking Hardy in, and gave him half a crown to watch the window outside for twenty minutes. I listened at the door myself, and could hear Hardy moving and breathing in the room.

I kept my eye on my watch. Ten minutes elapsed, and I was getting tired of waiting. You have no idea how long ten minutes is when you want it over. In a quarter of an hour I heard Hardy's voice at the door.

"Anstruther, let me out; he's coming now. We'll see him in the sitting-room."

I opened his door, and we went into the sitting-room. I was somewhat alarmed, but Hardy seemed to take it as a matter of course.

"Mind, I don't know the man. But as you know every one in Exington, you must tell me what to ask him."

Scarcely were the words out of his mouth when the door opened, and an elderly gentleman entered. He walked to a chair as if nothing unusual were happening, and seated himself, saying:—

"I am here."

I should have said that I live at Exington, and am confidential manager to the firm of Renfrew, Crawford, Leitch & Co., a well-known though not long-established banking-house. My position depends on the good-will of the partners, but I had every reason to rely on it. Imagine, then, my horror when, in the interesting subject on whom Hardy and I were experimenting, I recognized the well-known form of Septimus Renfrew, the senior partner—in fact, the creator of the business. He was looking at me with as little concern as if we had been in the bank parlor together, but to my delight, he seemed not to recognize me. I returned his look, but did not dare to utter a word. Ruin stared me in the face if tomorrow he recognized that he had been made the victim of a freak of mine, and I heartily wished I had never challenged Hardy to this senseless trial of his own skill.

He, however, had no fears. He came up to me and whispered:—

"What shall I ask him? What is his name?"

The position was most embarrassing. There sat my employer gazing at me placidly. He seemed quite collected, in full possession of his faculties. With a mixture of shyness and alarm, I had to name him and propound a question. At last he turned to Hardy.

"You sent for me—why?"

"Confound it, man! Can't you understand? His name and a question.

I collected myself. Evidently Mr. Renfrew did not recognize me, and as it could only be due to Hardy's influence that he did not, it might cease if I delayed longer. So I answered quickly:—

"Septimus Renfrew. Ask him how he began banking."

"I sent for you, Mr. Renfrew," began Hardy, in a tone he might have used in addressing his butler, "because I wanted to hear how you were first led to begin banking."

Mr. Renfrew's face blanched, and he hesitated.

"Now, Mr. Renfrew. I am waiting."

"Could you not choose some other subject," stammered he.

"I chose to select this one," replied Hardy, loftily.

"I had rather not speak of it," said Mr. Redfrew, piteously. "It is a subject I never mention to anyone. I have not said a word about it since Campbell died.

"Campbell! Who was he?"

"My partner. He was very clever. Much cleverer than I. Such decision of character. Not very scrupulous, but I can't well blame him."

"You interest me very much," said Hardy, with a side glance at me. "You and Campbell came here together, I suppose?"

"Yes, we did—together—but I had rather not mention it."

The situation was becoming intolerable. I could not tell what was coming. But in any case it was a breach of duty to sit by while something he was reluctant to tell was drawn out of the mouth of my employer. I could not permit it, so I spoke in a whisper to Hardy, Mr. Renfrew all the time looking on as if our conversation did not concern him.

"Stop, Hardy! If he does not want to answer, don't press him. If you persist, it will ruin me. He is the head of our bank."

The head of your bank!" Then he recovered himself. "If I keep my hold on him you will not be recognized. Interrupt me again at your peril."

I was silent. I reflected, my curiosity had brought this upon Hardy. So, as he felt confident of his powers, I thought it prudent to let him alone.

"Now, Mr. Renfrew. You have had a good time to consider. Begin at once."

"I had rather not," began he.

"But you must," broke in Hardy. "I command you to."

"Do you want me to begin from the beginning?"

"From the very beginning. When you first met Campbell."

"That was when we were clerks," he began, with what seemed strange timidity. "We ran away because we thought we were found out."

"Found out in what?"

"We collected some money."

"And I suppose—forgot to enter it in the books?" suggested Hardy.

"I'm sorry to say we did," replied my principal sadly. His slow words and deep dejection were so pathetic that at all costs I determined to interfere. He had done me many an act of kindness. The recollection of them made me sign to Hardy, but he only glared at me, and continued his ruthless questions.

"How much was it?"

"We each got two hundred pounds. Baigent must have found it out, only he was so ill. He died the day we were to go, but Campbell made me stay and work a week's notice. Oh, that week! They never found us out after all; young Baigent was no use at figures."

"And then you came here?"

"Yes, Campbell thought it was a good place, and so it was."

"Did you come here to start a bank?"

"Yes, Campbell's idea was to do something of the kind."

"And of the same kind as the Baigent business?"

"Yes, like that."

"He must have been an astonishingly clever fellow."

"He was, but unscrupulous," sighed Renfew. "He put it this way. To start a bank, you need one of two things — capital and credit. But as the only use of capital is to get you credit, it follows that if you have credit you don't need capital. He said he did not reckon courage, because he had that. I remember he laughed as he added, 'At least I have courage, and you have desperation, which is just as well.'"

There was a pause.

"Go on," said Hardy, and Mr. Renfrew continued in a monotonous voice—

"We had two hundred pounds apiece. Campbell proposed to spend part of it in getting credit. 'The other half,' he added, 'will, in any case, help us to get away.'"

"I don't understand you, Mr. Renfrew," said Hardy; I hope you are not concealing anything or trifling with me."

"Oh, no," protested he. "I am not trifling. I didn't understand Campbell myself at the time, so I am not surprised that you don't understand me."

"Well, how did you proceed?" said Hardy, reassured.

"We came here, and lived for a month or so in the best style. Not extravagantly. Campbell said that would not do. We lived, he said, as befitted our position. He told them at the hotel that we meant to open a bank, and of course the proprietor told everyone he met. We took three or four rooms as temporary premises. You can see them now in Cross street. One room looked into the street, one of the two behind opened into the back lane."

"So that you could get away easily?"

"I think so. We went to the churches and chapels. I remember we tossed. I got the chapels and he the churches. We subscribed to the charities and the building funds, attended missionary meetings, and that sort of thing. Thus we became acquainted with some of the richer people, and were asked to dinner. We mentioned the new bank whenever we could."

"The subscribers must have made a large hole in your £200," suggested Hardy.

"Not very large," he responded, cheerfully. "We only promised most of them, you know."

"Oh, I see."

"Besides, it was understood that the funds were to be deposited with us. Campbell distributed circulars, saying the bank was opened to meet a long-felt want ('that's true enough,' he said to me.) We promised seven per cent on deposits. I wanted to make it ten, but Campbell thought it would look too good, so we only said seven."

I was simply thunderstruck. Seven per cent on deposits. It would ruin any bank. They only gave two per cent now, and even then we had difficulty in making ends meet. However, I remembered that Mr. Renfrew was under an unknown influence, and his statements were probably not to be relied on. This consideration relieved my conscience, because if one part of his story were incorrect, the whole of it might be so, and then I was the less guilty in listening to a revelation which, though it looked ugly, was probably—well, inexact—all through. Evidently Hardy believed every word, for he continued—

"That was a bold offer."

"It was," assented Mr. Renfrew, bluntly. "Campbell said it did not matter. What we wanted was—business."

"Money?" suggested Hardy.

"Yes, yes; the money! Campbell called on one or two business houses in the town, which he fancied were in difficulties. Raeburn was one. We offered him an overdraft without security if he would transfer his account to us."

"Why without security?"

"The other banks had that, you know," he said confidentially. "There were a good many other firms in the same condition, and they accepted our offers. Young Montgomery gave us a good many hints and introductions."

"Who was young Montgomery?"

"Lord Abchester's oldest son. He is the present earl. His father, who died about the time the bank opened, was one of our first customers."

This enabled me to fix a date by which I could test the truth of the wonderful story. We all knew Lord Abchester at the bank. A permaturely old man, immensely wealthy, the owner of half the minerals in the county. His father, the first earl, made his money by enterprise, and become a peer by party services. But the story was too old for me to know anything but the bare outlines.

"Lord Abchester?" exclaimed Hardy in surprise.

"It was done through his son," replied Renfrew simply.

"Yes, but how did you become so intimate with the son in a month?"

"It was not so difficult in those days," said he, smiling. "Young Montgomery was very different from what he is now—just as I am," and he sighed. "He was a wild young fellow, who owed money all over the country. He and his father got on badly in consequence, and he spent a lot of time at the hotel. Then Campbell got to know him. We gave him dinners, and lent him a little money, and promised him more when the bank got fairly started."

I am sorry to admit that all this bygone scandal interested me so much that I entirely forgot my own responsibilities. I ought to have stopped Hardy at any cost. But he ignored my close relations with Mr. Renfrew, and before I could recall myself to my duty, continued briskly—

"Now tell us how you opened the bank?"

"We began on Saturday, July 2," pursued Mr. Renfrew in a dreamy voice. "We began on Saturday because Sunday gave us time, and the farmers came into town on Saturday. A good deal of money was put in on Saturday and not much drawn out. So we began on Saturday. We had one clerk, Leitch, the son of one of the clergymen in the town. He deposited £1000, partly as security, and partly to induce us to make him chief cashier. It was Campbell's idea to get the money. He pointed out how useful he could be both because he was well known in town and because he knew nothing about the business. When Campbell and I went to the bank at 9 o'clock, we found him waiting, and Campbell gave him very strict instructions.

"'Leitch,' he said, 'we have agreed to make you chief cashier, on the recommendation of your good father, and you must not forget that we depend on your discretion not to compromise the good name of the bank by any error. For a short time—until we get to know our customers—you must not pay out money without inquiry. You can receive all the checks presented, and say we are both out and ask the presenter to call next day. Then you can bring them in to us to have the signature verified.'

"Leitch promised to do this, and all that day Campbell and I sat in the back room before our vacant books. For a long time no one came in, and we regarded each other with grave faces. About 10.30 Leitch brought in £33, 10s., which a farmer wished to deposit. Then came one or two clergymen and a Baptist minister with checks on rival banks, for the amounts of buildings and other funds. I took the signature while Campbell slipped out at the back and cashed the checks. We put the money into a handbag (I have it still), and by the time the bank closed at one, we had £343, 10s, 11d. in deposits, and Leitch's £1000, all in notes and gold. Leitch was delighted, and congratulated us warmly, as he brought in a further supply of checks, which we had not time to cash. Campbell took it all as a matter of course, and when we had dismissed Leitch we sat down to consider the situation, Campbell took up Bradshaw. 'Exington, 5.30; London 7.20. The Continental trains run on Sundays as well as on week days. Barcelona 5.30, Monday.' He turned to the books—'£1343, 10s. Put the capital at £400, including traveling expenses; that makes 330½ per cent, made in, say, three months. If we go on at that rate we should make 1343 per cent, per annum.'

"'Excuse me,' I said, for I like to be accurate in business, 'but the capital is included in the sum of £1343, so that we can put only £943 to the credit of profit and loss, or say 230 per cent.'

"'Quite right,' said Campbell; 'it's not so good as I thought. We cannot leave our country for £942. Let us see what happens on Monday. We can at least cash these checks, which come to £70 more.'

"'Is it not a fearful risk?' I began. But Campbell broke in—

"'Is it a risk? he cried with a laugh. 'The whole thing's a risk. But we need not leave the game half played.'

"Campbell had a very peculiar influence over me; I felt I had to do as he said, just as if it were you. We went back to the hotel with our bag of money. We dined well, and Montgomery dined with us. Campbell was as light-hearted as a schoolboy, but I was too anxious to enjoy myself, so I went to bed early, leaving the others to play écarte. I spent such a night as I spent during the week we worked our notice at Baigent's. I dreamed of prison and took the chambermaid's knock for a summons to execution.

"Campbell was still in good spirits at breakfast. He had won from Montgomery, and said he thought we were in a vein of luck. I hoped so. He made me go to chapel. He went to church. I shall never forget walking through the streets with my secret. Leitch passed, all smiles. I am sure I blushed. The minister clapped me on the shoulder, and I started like one stung. I had great difficulty to persuade him I was not offended.

"We got through the day somehow, and I for one was delighted when Monday came. It brought us nearer the crisis; but then we had something to do, and anything was better than waiting and thinking. Campbell cashed all the checks as before and put the money into the bag. He kept a sheet of paper before him, adding up the amounts as they came in. The Bradshaw lay on one side of him, and his watch on the other. For mere want of occupation I opened headings in the books. Raeburn sent us a parcel of bills, and people entered to present checks. We could hear Leitch making all sorts of excuses. We were out. The books were not in order yet. Then he brought in the checks, of which Campbell made a list, to see, as he said, whether it would pay to cash them. At last Leitch announced that Montgomery was in the bank, and was told to bring him in."

Again I resolved to interpose. I rose and came behind Hardy, and whispered to him. He turned, pushed me back into my chair, and resumed—

"What did Montgomery say?"

"He said, 'I meant to have sent you a check this morning, Campbell, but I thought I would come and see you on business instead.'

"'Sit down, my dear fellow,' said Campbell; 'we can spare you more time to-day than we may be able to give you a week hence. You owe me, I think, £50 for money lent and £170 for Saturday. Shocking luck you had. I must give you your revenge."

"'Certainly,' rejoined he. 'I came to see you on the subject of money. It would be inconvenient to me to pay you at present, and I thought it would be as well to open an account here, and have a small overdraft, say £1000."

"I expected to see Campbell jump up and turn him out, but to my surprise he only smiled.

"It would suit us very well. What did you say was the security?'

"'That's the difficulty. The governor's estates are entailed on me. But then he's alive and kicking. How would a post obit do?'

"'Too remote for a banker, my boy,' said Campbell genially. You see how it would profit the other banks to make a run on us and catch us short of cash. But a bill with a good name—your father's, for instance.'

"Montgomery laughed shortly, and seemed about to speak. Then he checked himself.

"'You would not negotiate it?'

"'Oh, dear no, we are not likely to want it except in an emergency. It is quite a friendly transaction, and you'll take it up when the old man dies.'

"Montgomery turned rather pale, but answered with affected indifference, 'I'll see about it.'

"When he was gone I turned to Campbell.

"'You know he has not a penny in the world.'

"He looked at me very hard and answered calmly:

"'I think it might suit us. Wait till we see his bill. He has not got the money yet, you know.'

"That evening we had £500 more and not a check paid. The people knew Leitch, and accepted his excuses with a good grace. All told, the checks presented come to £300, so, as Campbell said, we could afford to go on at that rate as long as we liked, and he thought he would see the week out. In vain I protested, and urged the risk. Campbell had no fear; besides, he kept all the money. That evening I was so ill with apprehension that I ate but little dinner, and went to bed immediately after.

"Next morning Campbell came to breakfast in a very strange state. He chuckled to himself and hummed a song or two. I thought him insane, for in our awful circumstances I could find no reason for mirth. Indeed, I was quite angry when he took me by the arm and told me to come down to the bank at 9.30. We spoke little on the way, and Campbell sent Leitch at once for a bottle of brandy, and poured out a large glass.

"'Drink this,' he said; 'your face is enough to sink the Bank of England.' He turned to Leitch. 'Pay all the people who presented checks yesterday. I have had time to see they are in order. Put off those who bring fresh checks till to-morrow as usual. And by-the-way, the Hon. C. Montgomery has an account. Here is a check of his for £220. He may overdraw up to £1000, but of course treat his checks like the others when they are presented.'

"'You mean ask them to wait a day,' said Leach. 'Of course you know all about Mr. Montgomery?'

"'I know he is the heir of Lord Abchester, and a very pleasant young gentleman.'

"'I mean do you know that he owes money all over the town, and that no one else will lend him a farthing?'

"'So he bears a bad character?' said Campbell simply. 'Thank you for your warning, Leitch.' Then he turned to me. 'You see how wise we were to have a local man with us. Do you know Lord Abchester, Leitch?'

"'Very well; he attends my father's church.'

"'So he does,' said Campbell. 'Will you go and ask him to look in here sometime in the course of the day. If he demurs, hint that it is a family matter, and we don't wish to go to his office. But we must see him to-day.'

"'Campbell', I broke in when Leitch was gone, 'how long is this to last? Do you not see the suspense is kill

ALTHOUGH most states have a law making July 4th a legal holiday, Congress has never made it such except in the District of Columbia, and Representative Mercer of Nebraska has introduced a bill to remedy the oversight.

WINTER caught New England and New York in a grip Sunday night which sent the mercury down to the lowest point in a dozen years. The record ran all the way to 49° below at Saranac Lake, N. Y., while New England points reported 37° below.

CHINA has taken a long step in advance in the establishment of a modern university in Tien-tsin. The president will be Rev. Charles D. Tenney, a graduate of Dartmouth College and Oberlin Theological Seminary. This step is the result of the victory of the Japanese in the recent war with China, which proved to the most enlightened minds of that country that the opening of Japan to the progress of thought and knowledge in the outside world was wiser than the conservatism of the Celestial empire.

REPORTS from Archangel, Russia, announce that Dr. Nansen, the Swedish Arctic explorer, has found the north pole and is now on his return. The report lacks confirmation, however, and there are many reasons for doubting its authenticity. Nansen believed that there was a strong continual current of water toward the pole, and proposed to take a ship specially prepared to withstand the ice into the northern region and float with this current. He based his theory largely on the discovery in 1884 of a number of articles which were found on the ice and claimed to be from the ill-fated Jeannette expedition. Their journey from the Jeannette to the place where they were found could only be accounted for on the theory of the ocean current, in which Nansen was a firm believer. It now transpires that the articles were thrown overboard from the United States ship Yantic in 1883 while on an Arctic trip, in the attempt of some of the younger officers to play a practical joke. Experienced Arctic explorers have no faith that Nansen has found the pole, or that he will ever be seen alive again.

The A. P. A. in Palmer.

The Republicans will have a new element to reckon with this spring in the annual town election,—the A. P. A's. A council was organized the first week in December, and its members are actively at work trying to make converts. Already great gains are reported, and a membership of 110 is claimed. Some of its members are so sanguine that they announce that "all Protestants will be A. P. A's. before spring."

What are the principles for which the A. P. A. exists? According to the statements of its members it proposes to "do something for American institutions," and the schools of Palmer are receiving the attention of the local branch. The "doing something" in this instance means the turning out if possible of all but Protestants who are in any way connected with the schools, no matter what their experience or qualifications, simply and solely because they are not Protestants. If this is doubted the followiug extract from the principles of the order as they appear in a printed circular, may throw some light on the question:

We protest against the employment of the subjects of an un-American ecclesiastical power as officers or teachers of our public schools.

A change of this nature in Palmer now would throw out of employment six young lady teachers who are graduates of the Palmer high school, and who have worked up to their present positions solely on their merits. The JOURNAL finds nothing American in such methods, and does not believe that a movement which supports such sentiments will find favor with any material proportion of the voters of the town.

In this connection it is interesting to know who the members of the order are. The majority of them are unwilling to have it known that they are members, but a few announce it boldly and others are known in various ways. With very few exceptions they are men who have previously taken little or no part in the affairs of the town beyond voting, and some have not always shown interest enough to do that. The Republicans will make a mistake if they allow this order and its sympathizers to name the candidates at the caucus, and will make a greater mistake by affiliating with it in any way.

Town Meeting Matters.

The annual town meeting is only about three weeks in the future, yet but little talk of town matters is heard. It has generally been conceded that the present board of selectmen has given the town a good business administration, and are entitled to a reëlection provided they were willing to run. Recent developments however seem to show material opposition in certain quarters, and it is stated that if the present board is elected again it will be compelled to "hustle." Among the names mentioned as likely to come before the Republican caucus are those of C. E. Fish, C. H. Hobbs, E. G. Hastings and M. J. Dillon. Any three of these would make a board which would be sure to give the town good service. It is for the voters to say, however, whether it is good policy to "turn down" a set of men against whom there is no particular complaint except that they have been there long enough and someone else should have a chance, or to please some who have not agreed with the board in all things. No town official can perform his duties to the satisfaction of everyone, but unless a set of men can be named which are sure to give the town better service than the present administration, the old board deserves a reëlection. The Democratic caucus is likely to renominate the present board.

It is pretty well understood that the A. P. A., a council of which has been organized in town since last March, will make a showing in the Republican caucus, and will endeavor to control certain nominations, particularly those for school committee, of which there will be three, to fill the places now occupied by Messrs. Breckenridge, Hobbs and Chandler. The terms of Mr. Breckenridge and Mr. Hobbs expire this year; Mr. Chandler was appointed to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of L. E. Moore, whose term would expire in 1898, and under the law the appointment holds only until the next annual meeting of the town. Mr. Hobbs and Mr. Chandler are said to be the ones against whom the particular opposition of the order will be manifested.

The term of William Merriam as overseer of the poor also expires this spring, and the A. P. A. element has given out that he must go, having "run the town long enough." It will be hard to make the average voter believe that Mr. Merriam has done the town anything but good service, and it is certain, if many of his acts could be made known, that he has saved the voters hundreds of dollars. With the average cost per week of only $1.37 per person for the support of the inmates of the town farm, the students of town affairs will be quite likely to think that Mr. Merriam is the very man they want to "run the town" a while longer.

As to the other officers of the town, but little is heard as yet, though much is likely to develop during the coming week.

PALMER NEWS.

Catholic Rules for the Lenten Season.

The forty days fast of Lent began on Wednesday of this week, Ash Wednesday. The beginning of the season was observed at St. Thomas's Catholic church by the blessing and distribution of the ashes at the 8 o'clock mass. Services were also held at 7.30 in the evening. This evening the devotion of the Way of the Cross will be held. The regulations concerning the Catholic observance of the Lenten season are as follows, the only change being in the exceptions made for working people:

All the days of Lent, except Sundays, are fast days of obligation.

By permission of the Holy See the use of flesh meat is allowed, once a day only, on Mondays, Tuesdays, Thursdays and Saturdays in Lent, except the Saturdays in Ember week and Holy week. The use of meat on Sundays is not limited as to the number of times.

Lard and fat of any kind, as well as butter, may be used in preparing food on any day in Lent. This dispensation is extended also to the days of fast and abstinence throughout the year.

A collation, not exceeding the fourth part of an ordinary meal, is allowed in the evening, at which eggs, fish, butter, cheese, and milk may be used.

In the morning a small piece of bread is allowed with a cup of coffee, tea, chocolate, or some similar drink.

When the principal meal cannot be taken at noon, the order may be inverted, and the collation be taken in the morning and the dinner in the evening.

The use of flesh and fish at the same meal is not allowed, even on Sunday.

Those who are excused from fasting are not restricted as to the number of times they wish to eat meat on the days on which meat is allowed.

By virtue of an indult, working people and their families are released from any obligation of abstaining from the use of flesh meat at any time, except on the Fridays of the year, Ash Wednesday, the Wednesday and Saturday of Holy Week and the vigil of Christmas. Those who are bound to the obligation of fasting and permitted on certain days of Lent to use flesh meat at one meal only, are, during Lent, even under the above indult, not allowed the use of flesh meat oftener than once during the day.

The following persons are exempted from the obligation of fasting: All under 21 years of age and those of advanced age, the sick, those who cannot fast without grave injury to their health, women in pregnancy, or nursing infants, and all of those whose duties are of very laborious or exhausting nature.

To Improve the Opera House Stage.

The Odd Fellows are considering the expediency of changing the stage in the opera house to make it more desirable for theatrical companies. The height above the floor is now only 16 feet, while nearly all the scenery carried by traveling companies is 18 feet or more; consequently much of it cannot be used in a desirable manner. To remedy this defect it is proposed to move the lodge room, which is directly above the stage, and give the space clear to the roof for stage purposes. This, with an enlargement of the proscenium arch to the ceiling of the room, will give much better facilities for the staging of plays than at present. It is hoped to have the work done this summer.

Furniture and fixtures,	371

The total is $2635, a gain of $334 over last year. There have been 41 different persons cared for at the farm during the year; the largest number at any one time was 29, and the average was 21½; the net cost per week per inmate was $1.376. There were three deaths during the year, two males and one female, and one birth.

In the Universalist church next Sunday morning Rev. H. F. Moulton will preach a short sermon on "Our George—some of the characteristics of his remarkable life and labors." Directly after the preaching service the children of the Sunday school will give a "Home patriotic concert" in the chapel. The music will be in charge of Miss Annie Fish, piano, and Miss Fannie Parmenter, violin. Mrs. W. H. Small will have charge of the singing, and Mrs. H. F. Moulton, Miss Ethel Ely and Miss Eloise Stone will have charge of the speaking. This will be the first of a series of concerts to be given by the school the coming year in place of the regular lesson. Special decorations will be in charge of a committee of which Mrs. J. F. Holbrook is chairman. In the evening there will be a Lenten preaching services, the topic being "Where and what are your treasures?"

The members of the Ladies' Tuesday Social Club gave a reception Wednesday evening to their husbands, the members of the Chautauqua Circle of Palmer, the Current Events Club of Monson, and other invited guests, at the residence of Mrs. E. G. Hastings on West Main street. The spacious rooms were handsomely decorated with palms and potted plants, and about 90 guests were present. The attraction of the evening was the talk given by Miss Linda Hawley Brigham on Saxony. Miss Brigham spent a year there, and wove into her story graphic descriptions of Dresden, its buildings and institutions, and gave interesting anecdotes concerning the customs of the people and her life in a German family. All too meager was the tale, and although the clock told that she had talked an hour it seemed as though Father Time must have quickened his pace materially, so short had the story seemed. After the lecture refreshments were served.

The attention of the district court was occupied last Saturday with the cases of a couple of Arabians, or Syrians, or goodness-knows-what nationality, of the class that goes from place to place peddling small wares of various descriptions. The woman's name was Mary Shehan,—at least that's what the court records have it, and the man's name was put down as Andrew Nauseph, although there is an element of uncertainty about it. Mary claimed that a few weeks ago Andrew had knocked her down at Monson and taken $23.75 from her, good silver money, which she carried in a belt. Neither could "make United States talk," and so two interpreters alternately jabbered at the witnesses and reported what they said to the court;—that is, they reported something. The woman stuck to her story, but the man denied it wholly. Mary was a strapping woman of perhaps 160 pounds, while Andrew would have had to bear down hard to make the scales show 135 pounds; besides, he had the look of a habitually henpecked mortal. The Court evidently took these matters into account, and discharged the defendant. During the trial it transpired, however, that both had been peddling without a license, and each was called upon for a fine of $15, which was paid.

District Court.

There was one civil entry last Saturday, Henry G. Rogers, et al, against Frank F. Maguire and trustee, all of Monson. The case of W. Royce against Henry E. Worth and trustee, both of Wales, was decided in favor of the plaintiff, and judgment rendered for $12 and costs; the defendant appealed.

In the criminal court the cases of William Connolly, for illegal liquor keeping at Thorndike and for keeping a liquor nuisance, were continued until to-morrow. Bert F. Williams, who was brought here from Concord, where he had served a sentence for burglary in Springfield, pleaded guilty to burglarizing the Weeks House on the 17th of December, 1894, and was sent back to Concord; later in the day he wanted to retract his plea and make it not guilty, but the judge decided that he had told the truth before, and declined to allow the change. Matthew Ash of Wilbraham and James Shea of Springfield were sent to the house of correction for 30 days each for drunkenness.

THREE RIVERS.

At the Baptist church next Sunday evening Mr. Thomas will begin a series of sermons on the "Prodigal Son." A special subject will be announced for each sermon. LEGISLATIVE MATTERS.

BOSTON, Feb. 19, 1896.

Every broad act of legislation is sure to be the basis of further legislation, either in extension or modification of the principle first laid down, or to provide for its consequences Among the plenty of illustrations which might be cited are the metropolitan water act of last year and the Boston subway act. Already the towns and people in the affected metropolitan district are coming to the Legislature for compensation for losses. The manufacturers who lose their property want to have financial satisfaction. The town of Holden, which was not taken into the account at all, wants to be recompensed for the loss it suffers in the practical obliteration of its neighboring town of West Boylston, and so it goes. It seems that Boston has planted a thrifty crop of lawsuits, as well as a water plant, in taking this large area. So, in the case of the subway, rival interests are already petitioning for the use of it. One of the propositions is that every company which runs street cars within ten miles of the state house shall have the right to enter the subway. Another is that Boston shall not forbid any company to use the subway upon equal terms with another, and still other ideas are proposed. When the subway is ready for use, then the effort to monopolize it will doubtless break out afresh, and the virtue of the Legislature will be put to a severe test.

The old effort of last year to permit fraternal beneficiary associations to employ paid agents has been defeated in the House. It was argued that if the employment of such agents were permitted the weak lodges would canvass for new members and would become strong. In reply, it was argued that nothing would suit the old line companies better than this, and one of their representatives was quoted as saying that this bill would be their first start upon a toboggan slide, and that they would soon come to an end if they resorted to this way of doing business. The debate brought out the fact that a large proportion of the members in the fraternals themselves do not want permission to employ agents, but prefer to rely wholly upon their fraternal principle. The House was almost unanimous against the bill.

The extension of the civil service reform is seen in the bill reported from the judiciary committee to appropriate $12,000 for the extension of the principle to the labor service of cities. In spite of the opposition of the politicians to the principle of civil service reform it continues to gain power, and it proves its worth by its results. It is to be observed, in connection with the subject, that Mr. F. Sullivan of Boston has put in a bill to exempt from the civil service act all honorably discharged Union veterans, and all who have received a medal of honor from Congress. Though the hearts of the people are warm for the veterans, yet the principle of an honest and efficient civil service has come to stay.

It looks at this time in the year as if the Legislature would have its hands full of important business till well into the summer, and as if it would be impossible for the members to finish in time for any of them to go to the national Republican convention, either as delegates or alternates. This taxation issue is one which will occupy much time of the Legislature. It is one of the most important questions of the session. It has been fought over for years without any evident gain to either side. It demands the closest consideration which the ablest talent in both branches can give it. There is the redistricting of the state for councillors and senators, and the reapportionment for representatives, which will occupy considerable time. The woman suffrage fight looms up in the distance with heavy fortifications in the shape of thousands of names of petitioners from all parts of the state. The amount of business is evidently going to exceed that of any previous year, for it equals the record already and the branches continue to suspend the rules to admit new matter.

President Lawrence is reported to be gaining the good opinion of the Senate by the dignified and able manner in which he fills the chair. He is alert, energetic, and yet fully observant of the proprieties and necessities of the place. In the House things do not go as smoothly at the desk. It may not be best now to be drawing contrasts between the group there now and such as has been seen there in the past, but there is not the promptness and accuracy of proceedings, and many members see now that the state might have done better.

Anything which touches the doctors is always sure of a large audience at the state house. So it is not at all strange that the old hall of the House has been filled with remonstrants against the desire of the state board of registration in medicine that it may have more power. The board wants to enforce the spirit of the law more thoroughly, and of course those who are held down by the regulations want to be as free from restrictions as possible. The hearing recalled the former hearings when hundreds of doctors were working to prevent the adoption of the registration law at all. The contest against state regulation is always animated on the part of the interested classes, but the good of the public wins in the long run. There has just been reported a bill for the establishment of a new state board of chiropody, to keep out swindlers and frauds in this line of business and to prevent its being used as a cover for gross immorality, as it has been to the injury of honest practitioners. Of course the rascals will try to defeat the bill, but the petitioners made out a plausible case.

The House finished the biennial amendment on Tuesday, and at the final vote every member was on record but two,—Speaker Meyer, who was in the chair but did not have his name called, and Mr. Ross of New Bedford, who was not well enough to be present. The speaker would have voted for the amendment and Mr. Ross would have voted against it. The final vote was 176 yeas to 49 nays and six pairs. The resolves were divided, so that two roll calls were taken on them. One was on the amendment relating to state officers, and the other was on the election of members of the Legislature. With one or two exceptions the vote was the same on each question, and no member changed sides. There were eight Democrats who voted for the amendment, and seven Republicans who voted against it. Otherwise the vote was on party lines. Great difference of opinion exists regarding the final fate of the amendment. Some of the Republican leaders who spoke for biennials say that very likely the people will reject the amendment, while others are quite certain that there will be a large popular majority in favor. Quite a number of those who voted for the amendment will oppose it at the polls, but whether there were enough of those to have prevented the defeat of the amendment, had they voted on its merits, there is not now sufficient data to say. Of course there is no question that the Senate will pass it, and then it will go to the people. Doubtless it will be voted upon at the regular November election, for then there will be the largest vote.

Signs increase that there will be one of the biggest contests over taxation which has ever been seen in the Legislature. The "merchants' municipal committee of Boston," which is the same as Mayor Quincy's cabinet consisting of Republicans and Democrats, has presented petitions for a constitutional amendment and for changes in the tax laws which the movers in the Anti-Double Taxation League regard as going far beyond their own propositions in their radical nature. It is proposed to raise the taxes for local expenses from taxes on real estate, corporation franchises, and upon collateral legacies and successions. There will be, henceforth, if the legislation passes, a great exemption of personal property which is taxed. The passage of these measures is urged in the interest of the prosperity of the state, while the opposition of the farming element seems to be aroused more than ever. The first sign of the feeling occurred in the House on Wednesday afternoon over a mere question of committee reference. The clash between the two sides was sharp, but the opponents of the municipal committee won by a large majority. It is said that the arts of the wealthy are being used already upon the Legislature to carry the bills. LANDON.

NEIGHBORHOOD NOTES.

MONSON.

Hearing on the Proposed Change in Main Street.

The second hearing in regard to relaying the portion of North Main street which bounds the Center cemetery was given by the county commissioners at the selectmen's room in Memorial Hall last Saturday. Chairman T. M. Brown opened the session by reading the petition, and called for remarks. Dr. George E. Fuller responded in behalf of the petitioners, first calling attention to the influential signers of the petition and giving a history of the work of beautifying the Thompson extension of the cemetery from the time the commissioners took hold of it; of the offer of the Cyrus W. Holmes heirs to put in a supporting bank wall and handsome granite arch at the southeast entrance; of the finding that the terrace had encroached upon the road; of the decision of the commissioners to take a portion of the same in order to successfully carry out their plans, and of their action being stayed by the selectmen. He said that in his opinion a road 49 feet wide at that place was ample, and he feared that the donors of the wall and arch might withdraw their offer if the present plan was not conformed to. R. M. Reynolds agreed with the doctor in regard to the width of the road, saying it had never been worked to its full width and was not liable to be, and as the town was not liable to appropriate money for the cemetery improvements, it seemed a pity that all should not work harmoniously where such an offer was made by private individuals. Edward F. Morris said that he was instrumental in procuring the Thompson extension, and felt much interest in it; he doubted if the carrying out of the present plans would improve the place, and thought that the "public convenience and necessity" could not possibly require the narrowing of the highway, and that however much the commissioners might desire the extra land in the cemetery, it should not be considered as important as that people should have a broad highway. He spoke of the state road which is likely to be built across there the coming season, also of the electric railway for which a franchise is pending. Rufus P. Cushman thought it was early to criticise the work of the commissioners, and that they should have their way in the matter. Arthur D. Norcross, chairman of the selectmen, spoke briefly in behalf of the town, having given his reason for not allowing the work to go on in the previous hearing, but stated that he had no reason to think that the gift to the town would be withdrawn even if the commissioners' plans were not carried out to the letter. Arthur D. Ellis spoke in favor of the petition. Solomon F. Cushman followed, saying that he indorsed the work of the cemetery commissioners; had lived in town 40 years, and had never heard of any plan to work the highway to its full width. R. M. Reynolds spoke again, saying that in case an electric railway was built it should look out for its own land and not be dependent upon the town roads. Daniel G. Potter was opposed to narrowing roads as a rule, and saw no reason why the commissioners should not conform to the present lines. The meeting was adjourned to Wednesday, March 4th, in Springfield, the regular session of the county commissioners.

Death of Mrs. Mary J. Spaulding.

The many friends of Mrs. Mary J. Spaulding were greatly saddened by the news of her death in Springfield Sunday evening. Mrs. Spaulding went to the home of her sister, Mrs. J. H. St. Clair, to assist her in caring for their mother, Mrs. Electa J. Ellis, ten days before. Mrs. Spaulding had not been in her usual health for some time, having Bright's disease, and when attacked by the grippe about the middle of last week her condition became serious, and when Mrs. Ellis died Saturday night she lay in a critical state. The end came about 8 o'clock Sunday evening. A double funeral was held Wednesday, the body of Mrs. Ellis being taken to Stafford for burial, the body of Mrs. Spaulding being brought to Monson to the house of Theodore Reynolds, where a service was held yesterday afternoon, Rev. Harry Blackford officiating.

Mrs. Spaulding was the daughter of Shepherd and Electa J. Ellis, and was born at Ware. The family soon removed to Stafford, where she was educated and her girlhood spent. She went later to Palmer and was married at that place to George Spaulding, a clerk in the Springfield post office. When his health failed some ten years ago Mr. and Mrs. Spaulding came to Monson to live with her brother, Dwight W. Ellis. Mr. Spaulding's death occurred in the autumn of '92. Mrs. Spaulding has for some time been managing housekeeper in the home of Theodore Reynolds. In this capacity she was very efficient, having great executive ability and was popular with visitors, being of a bright, cheery temperament. Mrs. Spaulding was a member of Olivet church in Springfield, but was a constant attendant at the Monson Universalist church. She leaves, besides Mrs. St. Clair, a sister, Mrs. Susan Hyde of Pittsfield, and two brothers, Dwight W. Ellis of Monson and Justin J. Ellis of Orcutts.

Interscholastic Athlethic Association Meeting.

The annual meeting of the Western Massachusetts Interscholastic Athlethic Association was held at Pratt gymnasium at Amherst last Saturday, and according to all reports it was somewhat spicy. The meeting was called to order by Leonard A. Prouty. Every school in the association was represented except Conwell Academy, nearly all the schools having two delegates present, even Northampton, which was admitted to the association that day. Monson received her share of officers, Mr. Prouty being elected president, Horace W. Cristy a member of the executive committee, and Horace W. Broughton auditor. A motion was made by Holyoke that the membership of the association be confined to high schools only, which Monson thinks was for no other purpose than to throw her out. There was a long discussion over the matter, in which all the other schools condemned Holyoke's action, and when the vote was taken every city with the exception of Holyoke voted against adopting the measure. The age limit, which for some time has been advocated, was adopted, and is 21 years, which will debar Grover of Monson, one of her best athletes. The half-mile bicycle race was dropped from the list of events, but the standing high jump was not dropped, although it has been so reported. The schools seemed to be on good terms with each other, and great enthusiasm was expressed concerning the meet, which will probably be June 6. It was the general opinion that it was pluck which had won the victories for Monson in former years, and if she wins this year, which is felt by some to be doubtful, it will be by this quality, as she is next to the smallest school in the association, Many outnumber her by three or four to one.

Congregational Church Lenten Services.

The seventh series of Lenten services in the Congregational church began last evening with a sermon by Rev. W. T. Hutchins, subject, "Christ the supreme work of God." The services will be continued with the following speakers and subjects: 27th, Rev. K. F. Morris, "Christ our hope;" March 5th, Rev. M. W. Jacobus, "Jesus' value of the real within us;" 12th, Rev. G. W. Winch, "Christ our peace;" 19th, Rev. W. R. Newhall, "Fellowship with Christ's sufferings;" 26th, Rev. J. E. Tuttle, "The approach of the Passion." The subjects for the Sunday evening meetings will be: "Remarkable experiences in the life of Jesus," and are divided as follows: 23d, "The baptism;" March 1st, "The temptation;" 8th, "The Sabbath at home;" 15th, "The transfiguration;" 22d, "The annointing at Bethany;" 29th, "The triumphal entry." There will be services every evening during Passion week: Monday, "The preparation for the Passion;" Tuesday, "The joy of the Passion;" Wednesday, "God's fatherhood tested by the Passion;" communion service; Friday, "The consummation of the passion;" Saturday, "Our fellowship in the Passion; Easter, "The resurrection joy," Sunday school concert.

Rev. Harry Blackford left this morning for Boston.

The schools close next Friday, and begin March 23.

Everett Robbins found trailing arbutus in bloom a few days ago.

As he stepped upon the platform at the station his identity was announced by one of the trainmen, who stated that on the journey Mr. Newell had restored the hearing of a man who had been deaf for nine years. A resident of Monson, formerly of Jacksonville, received a letter this week from a friend in that place, saying that Mr. Newell had performed some wonderful cures by a power which could not be explained; also that he had declined an offer of $15,000 a year to go to some city. HAMPDEN.

Edward Wall died here last week from cancer of the lip, from which he had suffered for many months. He was born near Waterford, Ireland, in 1813, and learned the wheelwright trade and something of carpentry. In 1851 he was induced by his brother, living in Stafford, Ct., to come there, leaving his family behind. But finding no work that suited him he went West; after spending a year there he returned to his brother's discouraged, when he was advised to apply to J. R. West of South Wilbraham, a carpenter, for work. Mr. West took him into his family, and a friendship was established which lasted more than forty years. He sent for his family in 1851, and it took all he had to get them here, but by the kindness of his new-made friends they were not allowed to suffer, and he was soon able to provide them with the comforts of life. He stayed with Mr. West three years, going thence into Marcus Beebe's wheelbarrow and plough shop, where he worked six years, then going to work for Mr. Wagain, where he worked fifteen years, since which time he has been farming. He leaves four children, a daughter in New Haven, John, a lawyer in Chippewa Falls, Wis., and a son and daughter at home; his wife died a few years ago. He has visited Ireland once and obtained a legacy left him, and probably leaves quite a property. On his last visit to Mr. West he touchingly alluded to the compact made many years ago, that the survivor should place the last shovelful of earth on the grave of the other, and he was assured that the compact should be carried out, but owing to the weather and Mr. West's blindness Mrs. West placed the earth above their old and valued friend as agreed.

WARREN.

Mr. and Mrs. A. W. Lincoln and daughter left Wednesday for a pleasant trip to Washington and Old Point Comfort.

Sued for Alienation of a Husband's Affections.

Gertrude C. Jones, widow of Arthur C. Jones, who died in Cleveland, O., on the 15th of January, has brought suit against her father-in-law, Thomas H. Jones, and his wife, Agnes P., formerly of Warren but now of Springfield, alleging that they are responsible for the alienation of her husband's affections last year. About three years ago Arthur Jones of Warren married Gertrude O Connell, by whom he had two children. A year ago his father, Thomas H. Jones, with his wife, hired and furnished a house in Warren and went to live with their son and wife. The arrangement was that Arthur should receive a certain sum monthly for taking care of his parents. The arrangement continued until last November, when it was broken up, and Arthur and his wife withdrew and went to keeping house by themselves. A few weeks later Arthur left his wife and went out West, dying in Cleveland, O.

Five years ago Arthur joined the Royal Arcanum and at the time made over the policy to his mother. At the time of his death it was then discovered that the policy had not been changed and the $3000 insurance, instead of reverting to his widow, was made payable to his mother, having apparently not been changed since his marriage. His widow then brought suit to recover this money, which it is claimed was due her. Mr. Jones says that the statements made about his using his influence to separate his son Arthur from his wife are totally unfounded. According to his story, he is ignorant of the cause of separation between Arthur and Mrs. Jones. They left in November, but he refused to make a statement of the reasons for their so doing. He also declined to say anything about his son's leaving his wife. He said, however, that his own wife had offered to settle the $3000 insurance upon Arthur's two children, providing the suit should be withdrawn. Gardner & Gardner of Palmer have charge of the case for Mrs. Gertrude Jones, and the claim is for $10,000.

John Anderson; M. S. Barton and Capt. John Anderson were elected delegates to attend the state convention at Boston and the congressional district convention.

Morse—Davis.

The residence of Alvertus J. Morse was the scene of a very pretty wedding Wednesday, their daughter Bessie being married to Perley E. Davis of Wilton, Me., in the presence of one hundred guests. Precisely at noon the bridal party took their stand under an arch of evergreen and cream carnations, while Miss Ora Parent played Mendelssohn's march. The ceremony was performed with a ring by Rev. S. A. Bragg. The bride wore a gown of white silk and carried cream carnations. The bridesmaid, Miss Elizabeth Bartlett of Belchertown, was gowned in cream cashmere with leghorn ribbons, and also carried cream carnations. Miss Gertrude Flint, sister of the bride, was bridesmaid, and Mr. Stone of Fiskdale was best man. Their presents were numerous. They have gone to housekeeping on Main street.

The soot in the chimney of Rev. H P. Smith's Florence Lake house, occupied by H. H. Hall, caught fire on Monday noon. So great was the smoke that neighbors notified Mrs. Hall, who was so busy about her dinner that she had not noticed it. She at once opened the chamber door and was met by dense smoke which nearly suffocated her. She sent word to Mr. Davis, who was painting at the barn; he came to the rescue, and with Mrs. Hall proceeded to investigate; they found that the great heat had blown out the caps in two rooms that were in vacant pipe holes; the flames and smoke were coming out and had set fire to the ceiling, and had it had a few moments more start it could not have been extinguished, and had it not been for the presence of Mr. Davis the house would have been burned. Mrs. Hall inhaled so much smoke that she has been and is at the present time in a critical condition. She was poisoned by the smoke and has been in spasms a large share of the time since; her recovery seemed doubtful for three days, but she is now a little more comfortable.

Accidental Shooting.

Trefle Charboneau, 15, was accidentally shot in the head at Stevens' mill about 3 o'clock Tuesday afternoon by a revolver in the hands of a companion, Louis Shea, 18. The two boys were employed in the mill and met in an alleyway while carrying bobbins to their jacks. After the usual boyish greetings, they dropped their loads and Shea brought forth a revolver. As they were examining it, it is said, Charboneau caught hold of Shea's wrist. At that moment the revolver went off, the bullet entering Charboneau's head near the left temple, and he immediately dropped insensible. In a moment the overseer of the spinning room in which the boys were employed was by the side of the wounded lad. He was placed upon some loose wool and Dr. W. W. Miner was summoned. The boy was carried to his home on Sherwin street. The ball was not found, and this forenoon the boy remains unconscious and is not expected to live. Both the boys were highly spoken of by Overseer Reilly, who regrets deeply that the accident happened in his room.

This is Certainly a Case Which Should Not be Lost.

We are aware that our people who suffer from nervous, chronic or long-standing complaints do not have the same opportunity to be cured as do the residents of the great cities where the most eminent physicians and specialists reside. In other words our people are debarred from seeking a cure by the great and skilled physicians owing to the cost of travel to the large city and the high fees charged by such physicians.

Here, therefore, is a chance for the sick of our community which should not be lost. Dr. Greene of 34 Temple Place, Boston, Mass., who has the largest practice in the world and who is without doubt the most successful specialist in curing all forms of nervous and chronic diseases, offers to give free consultation by mail to all sufferers whom their local physician has failed to cure. You have the privilege of consulting Dr. Greene by letter, describing your complaints, and he will, after carefully considering your condition, send you a letter fully explaining all your symptoms, telling you everything about your complaint so plainly that you will understand exactly what ails you. He will also give you his advice, based upon his vast experience and wonderful success in treating such cases, as to just what to do to get cured. All this will cost you nothing and you can thus have consultation with the best-know physician and acknowledged most successful specialist in the world, without leaving home and at no expense whatever. The Doctor is the discoverer of that greatest of all known medicines, Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy, and he has discovered many other most valuable remedies. Write to him now, for this is a chance to get cured which you may never have again.

—Pearline. The first washing-compound ever made, and the best. Proved to be absolutely harmless to anything that is washed—both by the women who have used it for years, and by scientific tests. But the enormous demand for Pearline—for something that will save work and yet be safe to use, has started a host of washing powders, all imitations of Pearline. They ought to make women think. If you can get risky help from a poor imitation, why not get safe help from the original and the best? 407 JAMES PYLE, New York

Gravel Cured.

(Philadelphia, Penn., Item.)

A healthier, heartier, happier man than John J. Neill, of 2437 North Eighth street, Philadelphia, could not be found in a day's search. The fact that he is still alive is a constant wonder to his friends.

In the fall of 1889 he began to suffer indescribable miseries from stone in the bladder. Consulting an eminent physician in Philadelphia, he was told that a surgical operation was necessary. So much did he dread the result, for if unsuccessful it meant death, that he put off the evil day as long as possible. While in this frame of mind, he heard of

Although disheartened, on July 1, 1893, he bought a bottle of it, and within a month had experienced beneficial results, and before he had finished the third bottle, the gravel was completely dissolved and his sufferings at an end.

Mr. Neill feels that he owes a lasting debt of gratitude to Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy, and for disorders of the bladder and urinary organs, says "it will effect a cure if one be possible."

Favorite Remedy is prescribed with unfailing success for rheumatism, dyspepsia and nervous troubles, in which it has cured many who were considered beyond the aid of medicine. All druggists, $1.

LARRABEE'S RHEUMATIC LINIMENT

A standard and sovereign household remedy for over half a century. It is a wonderful curative agent in all painful diseases, such as

Rheumatism, Lumbago, Neuralgia, Backache, Catarrh, Toothache,

and other painful ailments. To be had of all druggists, or by mail on receipt of 25 cents. Trade supplied by Geo. C. Goodwin & Co., or any wholesale druggist.

The Revival at Lynchville.

In th' little town uv Lynchville, near a Rocky mountain gap,
Which is not enough importance t' be pictured on a map,
There arrived upon a summer day—th' year I don't recall—
A preacher uv th' gospel, who would save th' souls uv all;
But th' boys had indications which wuz bent another way,
So we kindly notified j'im thet he hadn't better stay.

But it wuzn't no use talkin', he wuz bound ter do his job,
Ef he had t' do it fightin' single handed 'gainst th' mob.
So upon th' comin' Sunday he had pitched his gospel tent
'Nd had all his invitations t' th' wayward sinners sent.
'Nd they all responded promptly—but 'twuz not with pious views—
Fer their belts wuz full of shooters 'nd their stomachs full uv booze.

Wa-a-l, upon th' time arrivin' fer th' meetin' t' begin,
Thet there tent was full uv miners, gamblers, Shooters, smoke an' gin,
'Nd there wuzn't; many sinners in the audience thet day
'Cept had come ter emphasize th' fact—"he hadn't better stay."
But he mounted on th' platform, 'nd opened up a grip,
'Nd he jammed a "Smith an' Wesson" in each pocket uv his hip.

Then each feller poked his neighbor in th' ribs with all his might,
'Nd th' smiles ez lit their features, they wuz smiles uv pure delight.
Fer uv all th' entertainments in th' Wild an' Woolly West
There wuz none like pluggin' full uv lead some overbearin' guest.
Then the parson took some parcels very gently from th' grip,
'Nd 't wuz noted that he handled 'm with care they shouldn't slip.

Wa-a-l, he placed 'em on th' table; 'nd he cleared his throat a mite,
Then he said, said he: "My Christian friends, this here is dynamite;
'Nn I've got a double mission in yer bloomin' little town,
Ez I'm hired by th' railroad folks ter rip th' mountain down.
Or, t' make it somewhat plainer t' th' unbelievin' chap—
I'm here t' preach th' gospel an' t' widen up th' Gap.

"Ef there's any in th' audience ez wants it done ter-day,
You kin pull yer guns, my Christian friends, an' simply blaze away.
But, should you kinder reckon thet to-morrow 'll do ez well,
You kin keep yer shooters in yer straps, an' hark t' what I tell."

'Nd there wuz n't no one pokin' at his neighbor's ribs th' while,
'Nd there wasn't many features lit by thet delightful smile.
But th' parson preached his sermon, 'nd he preached again at night;
'Nd converted half of Lynchville with them bags uv dynamite.

AMONG THE PARAGRAPHERS.

THE MISSONARY'S AWFUL FATE.

He sailed away to the Fiji Isles,
But he was not slain on the shore,
Nor fattened ahead for a cannibal spread,
As others had been before;
But he met with a far more terrible fate
Than those who had lost their lives,
For the chieftain grim took a fancy to him,
And give him a hundred wives.

A Clear Conscience—"Don't some of these old songs haunt you?" "No, I never murdered any of them."—Chicago Record.

"Thousand pardons!" he exclaimed, bowing low. "You mistake, sir," she replied coldly; "I am not Gov. Altgeld."—Truth.

She—"Poor Uncle! And to be eaten by undiscovered savages!" He—"Yes, but he gave them their first taste of religion."—Life.

Bacon—"So your friend is engaged to that Boston girl, after all." Egbert—"Yes." "How did he melt her?" "He didn't; he simply froze to her."—Yonkers Statesman.

"Green tea or black, miss?" inquired the shopman, in a sort of medico-bed-side manner. "I don't think it matters," said the girl; "missus is color blind."—Fort Worth Gazette.

"Brown is weak financially, isn't he?" "He hasn't much money, but he gives employment to a great many men." "Who are they?" "Other people's bill collectors."—Brooklyn Life.

"Did I understand you to say Thompson was a farmer?" "Good gracious, no! I said he made his money in wheat. You never heard of a farmer doing that, did you?"—Beatrice Democrat.

"Uncle Josh—"I see where some of them fellers that make wheels say they have a bicycle plant that—" Aunt Fanny—"Land sakes! You don't mean to say they've got to growin' 'em!"—Puck.

"Mike," said Plodding Pete, "if you had a $20 bill would you blow it in?" "Nope," replied Meandering Mike; "I couldn't blow it in. Havin' $20 'ud take me breath away."—Washington Star.

A good-natured traveler fell a sleep in a train and was carried beyond his destination. "Pretty good joke, isn't it?" said a fellow passenger. "Yes, but a little too far fetched," was the rejoinder.—Stray.

Miss Burtis—"Don't be alarmed, Mr. Dolly." Mr. Dolly—"What's that horwid 'longshoreman swearing in the hall fowr?" Miss Burtis—"Do sit down. It's only papa. He stubbed his toe coming in, and he's only telling himself how sorry he is."—Frank Leslie's Weekly.

They were talking about the various methods of celebrating the passing of the old year and the coming of the new. "Did you ever dance the old year out and the new year in?" he asked. "Yes, indeed, scores of times," was the reply. And then she was sorry she spoke.—London Tid-Bits.

Police Inspector—"It was very plucky of you, ma'am, to have set upon the burglar and so ably captured him; but need you have injured him to the extent of necessitating his removal to the hospital?" QUALITY COUNTS.

Representatives, Senators and Statesmen Speak.

The Best and Safest Advisors of the People.

Agree Unanimously on this One Point.

For the People's Good. No Differenece of Opinion.

Imoprtant Decision Arrived At on All Sides.

Senator Victor L. Spear, of Braintree, Vt., who has filled every high position in the gift of the State, says:— "My wife was troubled with nervous debility bordering on prostration, and at the same time a trouble on her hands like eczema. The use of Doctor Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy produced very satisfactory results, healing the eczema and greatly improving the nervousness."

Senator Frank Plumley, of Northfield, Vt., who was Vermont's delegate to the Republican National Convention and who is a man of national reputation, says:—

"In the fall of 1892 I came out of the presidential campaign with my nervous system almost broke. Some of my personal friends advised me to take a course of Dr. Greene's medicines, which I did, with entire success. I use Dr. Greene's Nervura and find it an excellent remedy for that exhaustion caused by long continued mental work, and think well of it."

HON. CHAS. J. NOYES.

Judge Charles J. Noyes, of Boston, ex-speaker of the Massachusetts House of Representatives, states:—

"Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy reinvigorated and recreated my severely taxed nerves and debilitated vitality. To all needing an invigorator and permanent restorative, Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy is the best medicine within my knowledge or observation:

Hon. Samuel B. Page, of Haverhill, N. H., who for twenty-five years has been a member and leader of the New Hampshire Legislature, says:—

"I have used Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy, and take pleasure in recomending its use to all sufferers from any derangement or disturbance of the nervous system."

Add to these magnificent testimonials of the great and wonderful curative powers of Doctor Greene's Nervura, the fact that it is a physician's prescription, the discovery of the most successful specialist in curing nervous and chronic diseases, Dr. Greene of 34 Temple Place, Boston, Mass., who can be consulted free, personally or by letter, and you have the greatest and grandest endorsement of value and assurance of cure posessed by any remedy in the world.

about the same to-night, or more. Raeburn will want money on Friday, but this is only Tuesday. So, Renfrew, I mean to see this out, and get as much as I can. That you are frighened now makes no sort of difference, because your panic comes too late. Two thousand pounds will not last long, and what will you do then? Even the British public won't stand this sort of a thing often."

"I was about to answer him, when Leitch announced Lord Abchester, and Campbell had just time to say, 'If you speak a word, we are ruined,' when he entered."

"This is a very interesting discussion, Mr. Renfrew," interposed Hardy. "I think Campbell was right."

"Ah, sir, he was most unscrupulous," protested he. "When I saw that old man, with the long white hair falling over his high brow, and piercing gray eyes, I felt my position keenly, I assure you. His knees seemed weak, and he walked with a slight stoop, but he sat down composedly, and waited for Campbell to begin.

"'I am sorry we have not a better office to receive you in, Lord Abchester.'

"'I had a worse one when I began business.'

"'I hope we may meet with as much success. Bankers have to be cautious as to their securities, and as we have made and are to make advances on a bill signed by you, and are not well acquainted with your signature, we thought it desirable to see that it was genuine. A mere matter of form, of course.'

Lord Abchester examined the bill, and his face grew ashy pale.

"Who gave you this?"

"'Your son. We have already advanced £200 on it. But as it was a first transaction —'

"The old man evidently controlled himself with a great effort. He glared at Campbell, who returned the look without an appearance of concern. At last Lord Abchester spoke.

"'The signature is mine.'

"'Then we are quite satisfied with our security,' said Campbell, quietly folding up the bill. 'There is one thing you can do for us, Lord Abchester. It would be a great service to a new bank like ours if you would transfer your account to us. No doubt you would also arrange to keep £20,000 permanently to your credit.'

"'Impossible!" Why should I—'

"'Why should you not assist a young concern?' said Campbell with a meaning smile.

"'But you have no claim on me.'

"'An act of kindness like this will be a lasting credit to your name and family.'

"Lord Abchester looked at him intently.

"'Do you dare—' he snarled.

"'I saw it done.' There was a long pause, then Campbell—'It is understood you transfer the account here?"

"'Give me back the bill.'

"'We do not part with securities like that,' said Campbell dryly, 'but as long as you comply with the conditions, you may be sure this bill will not be mentioned.'

"'You drive hard bargains,' he said, and clutched his hat and stick, and staggered from the room. Campbell waited till he had been gone some minutes. Then he took up Bradshaw and flung it to the furthest corner of the office.

"'We don't want that now.'

"'We shall on Thursday,' said I, picking it up. 'I suppose he'll pay the money to-morrow.'

"'I thought you had more brains, Renfrew. Can't you rise above the methods of the common pickpocket—filching and running away? Sit down and put these books in order. At least you learned that at Baigent's.'

"'What, and leave behind us full proof of what we have done?'

"'Idiot,' said Campbell, 'I shall not go at all. Don't you see that we have made a business?"

I leaped from my chair and clutched the back, while he showed how this account would bring in others, and the cash in hand enable us to trade, and we had only to be honest and our fortune was made.

"It has all come true," he continued: "we never looked behind us since. It killed Lord Abchester. He died within a month, but his son had to agree to our terms as well. Campbell took most of the money to London, and lent it to other young Montgomerys. You've heard of Sam Israels? He was Campbell."

There was a silence when Mr. Renfrew concluded. Hardy broke it.

"Thank you, Mr. Renfrew. Your story is most interesting. Now remember, you may be asked for it again. I order you not to tell it, and you know you can't disobey me."

"I know."

"Now you can go home again. I wish to ask you nothing more."

"Thank you," and he turned and went out.

"Hardy," I said, as the door closed, "I am ruined."

"Why?"

"He is certain to remember this to-morrow, and will never forgive me for hearing his confession."

"My dear fellow, I answer for it he will not remember a word to-morrow morning. He'll feel tired, of course. If he does remember, you know too much. Find out whether Campbell ever existed. But now it is getting late, and I think I have shown you enough to-night to establish your faith in hypnotism. Good night."

Next morning I went to the bank as usual. Mr. Renfrew was late, but Mr. Leitch opened the bank, a formal old gentleman who wore swallow-tailed coats by day, with stock and high collars—yet kindly, and always ready to gossip. I had no difficulty in identifying him with young Leitch, the tool of Renfrew and Campbell, nor in establishing the existence of Campbell.

"One of the founders of the bank, Mr. Anstruther. A remarkable financial genius. But he would not be cooped up in a country town."

Sure of my ground, I awaited Mr. Renfrew's arrival. I gave a gasp as he came straight to my desk on entering, but it was merely to give some directions, and it was plain he remembered nothing.

"Governor seems rather dicky this morning," whispered Brook.

"He may have had a bad night," I answered.

Hardy says we might be partners in Renfrew, Crawford, Leitch & Co. if we liked, and I believe he is right.—Temple Bar.

The Discovery Saved His Life.

Mr. G. Cailloutte, druggist, Beaversville, Ill., says: "To Dr. King's New Discovery I owe my life. Was taken with la grippe and tried physicians for miles about, but of no avail, and was given up and told I could not live. Having Dr. King's New Discovery in my store I sent for a bottle and began its use, and from the first dose began to get better, and after using three bottles was up and about again. It is worth its weight in gold. We won't keep store or house without it." Get a free trial of LeGro & Lynde, Palmer; G. L. Keeney, Monson; F. A. Spencer, Ware.

A JOLLY OLD TAR.

The captain of a certain large sailing vessel insists upon being addressed as "Sir" by every one on board. One day a new hand joined the ship, and a short time after leaving harbor, being a well seasoned old salt, he was intrusted with the wheel. The captain came up and put the usual question, "How's her head?"

"Nor'-by-east," answered the old tar, very gruffly, taking the customary hitch in his trousers.

"My man," suavely answered the captain, "on this craft, when one of the crew speaks to me, he gives me a title of respect. Don't you think you might do so, too? Now how's her head?"

"Nor'-by-east, I tell yer," shouted the tar, displaying not a little irration.

"I'm afraid you don't quite understand me," responded the captain, good humoredly. "Let me relieve you at the wheel, and then you take my place and ask me the question. I will then show how it should be answered."

They accordingly change places.

"'Ow's her 'ead?" roared the tar.

"Nor'-by-east, sir," replied the captain, with gentle emphasis on the "sir."

"Then keep her so, my man, whilst I goes forrard and has a smoke," was the startling rejoiner from the old reprobate, who calmly commenced to suit the action to the word, and disappeared up by the forecastle, lighting a match as he went—Harper's Round Table.

The Cradle Ship.

When baby goes a-sailing and the breeze is fresh and free,
His ship is just the queerest craft that ever sailed to sea!
Ten fingers true make up the crew that watch on deck must keep,
While all a-row ten toes below are passengers asleep!
And mother is the pilot, dear—ah, none so true as she
When baby goes a-sailing, and the breeze is fresh and free!

When mother rocks the cradle ship, the wails—for shores—slip past;
The breezes from the garden blow when baby boy sails fast!
So fast he flies that Dolly cries she fears we'll run her down,
So hard a-port! we're not the sort to see a dolly drown;
And then, you know, we've got the whole wide carpet for a sea
When baby goes a-sailing, and the wind is fresh and free!

When baby lies becalmed in sleep, and all the crew is still,
When that wee ship's in port at last, all safe from storm and ill—
Two eyes of love shall shine above, two lips shall kiss his face,
Until in deep and tranquil sleep he'll smile at that embrace!
For mother watches, too, at night; while through his slumbers creep
Dream memories of sailing ere the breezes fell asleep.

YUSSUF.

"Prayer is better than sleep! Prayer is better than sleep! Prayer—is better—than sleep!"

The sound of the Mussulman's greeting to the day rang clear and impressive through the keen early morning air from the great Mosque of Fez, across the spacious yard of the Kasbah, filled with the Cadi's drowsy guards; along the narrow streets overhung with the ghostly habitations of the faithful; into the latticed-windowed, low-ceilinged sleeping rooms of the only hotel in the holy town of Fez, where an infidel may rest his thrice-accursed body with tolerable safety.

The only infidel thus favored at the time of which we write was the Hon. Hereward Trevayne. The call to prayers awoke him with a start. Springing from his bed, he went to the window overlooking the courtyard.

Impressed by the solemnity of the call of the Muezzin, and by the marvelous beauty of the dawn, Hereward drew a deep breath; then, turning to dress, he murmured aloud "Prayer is better than sleep. Ah, yes; sometimes no doubt. Looking out of that window at the sunrise, for instance. But just now, it strikes me rather forcibly that, so far as one individual is concerned, breakfast is better than either."

Which soliloquy was no sooner ended than he shouted at the top of his voice:

"Yussuf! Yussuf!"

The door opened almost immediately and a smooth, swarthy-faced Arab glided noiselessly into the room.

"Has the Lord Duke sufficiently rested his honorable bones?" he asked, with a low obeisance.

Yussuf's knowledge of English was remarkably good for a native, but it did not include an intimate acquaintance with Debrett or even Whitaker.

"My honorable bones," Trevayne replied, gravely, "are sufficiently rested; but my honorable stomach cries aloud that it has more than sufficiently rested. In plain English, Yussuf, breakfast, and as soon as you like!"

Yussuf bowed low and left the room as noiselessly as he had entered it.

After nearly three years' absence from England, Trevayne had worked his way back as far as Morocco. At Tangler, however, he had heard that a caravan was to start shortly from Fez into the interior, and with characteristic impulsiveness he suddenly decided to make one of the party, intending to return with a homeward-bound caravan, which, it was calculated, would be met within a few days' journey distant from Fez. He had accordingly, though not without a good deal of bother, settled all the necessary preliminaries.

That was a month ago, and the day of departure now appeared to be hardly any nearer. Sometimes, indeed, twelve or eighteen months are spent in making ready the equipment for such a caravan. To Trevayne's inquiries every morning the cry was still the same.

"Inshallah! If it please God-to-morrow."

But to-morrow the pig-skin water bottles must be made water-tight by being filled with oil and left to dry in the sun. And then there are the dates to be pressed into the saddles to form comfortable cushions until required for food. And so on, almost, it seemed to Trevayne, to infinity.

Finally, after the ten thousand details of a caravan equipment have been attended to, there is the merry-making and feasting, which is invariably indulged in for a week or two previous to the actual start.

It was during these last few days that Hassan, who, with Yussuf had been engaged by Trevayne as guide, was caught in the act of stealing some money belonging to the proprietor of the hotel. Trevayne dealt summarily with the thief, for it was not his first offense. He took Hassan by the scruff of the neck and kicked him vigorously all along the wide veranda, down the broad staircase, through the lengthy hall and out of the grand entrance into the crowded street beyond.

Yussuf, who had witnessed the incident with twitching fingers and a curious half closing of the eyes, turned to Trevayne and said, solemnly:

"It was well for him the Lord Duke chastened him, and did not hand him over to his tribe for the fitting reward of his sin."

"I suppose so," drily remarked Trevayne.

"Yes, when Allah wills it," said Yussuf, "they open the thief's hands and slash a knife across them so—"and Yussuf ran the forefinger of his right hand diagonally across the palm of his left—"and then rub saltpeter into the wounds and shut up the thief's hands and bind them; and he never steals again. And sometimes they hold a red-hot iron to the eyes of the thief until they are gone, and the thief never again sees anything to steal. God is great," concluded Yussuf, piously shaking his head.

At last the camels' loads, after almost innumerable futile attempts, were satisfactorily arranged, and everything was ready. As usual, a short preliminary march was undertaken to test the mettle of the camels, and then the caravan fairly started on its tremendous journey.

Soon the Holy City faded away in the distance; first the rambling, white, ghost-like houses, then the minarets, tall and stern as if standing guard over their lowly brethren; and then the drooping palm trees with their graceful outlines projected in jet black against the blue brightness of the sky, lingering on the horizon as if bidding a last reluctant good-by to the venturous travelers.

Then on over the shifting sand dunes the vast procession ranged, until, the sand becoming interspersed with sharp flinty stones, the caravan was halted in order that the camel's feet might be bound round and round with rags, making them look like huge boxing-gloves.

Then the night fell, outposts were stationed half a mile or so distant, and the caravan was formed into a sort of a square, but with the camels taking the place of the wagons and various impediments usually placed on the outside. Inside big fires were kept blazing all the night through, for in the desert the nights are icy cold, harder to be borne by reason of the burning heat of the day. Trevayne wrapped up in his burnouse—for he had assumed the Arab costume—lay at a short distance from one of the fires, while not far from him lay Yussuf asleep and snorting.

At last, just as Trevayne was dozing off, he thought he heard a slight crackling—a sound as of some one creeping toward him through the sand. Starting up into a sitting posture, he peered around him. For a moment he could see nothing, and then, by the light of the fire, he discerned a man crawling away on his hands and knees. When the intruder reached a spot where he thought he could not be seen, he turned his head. But Trevayne's sight was very keen, and he saw with a feeling of astonishment, and something like dismay, that a knife gleamed between the teeth, and that the face was the face of Hassan, the dismissed guide. The object of the nocturnal visit was only too plain. Murder was writ large on the features of the treacherous villain. Revenge was doubtless the motive. But how did the cur come there?

Trevayne puzzled over the problem until the velvet darkness grew into an austere gray. Then, long before the sun was up, he was again startled, this time by a shout. Rising to his feet, he saw two or three Arabs running around and awakening the sleepers by the simple method of striking them a stinging blow with a long cane.

Yussuf soon came to arouse Trevayne in a more civilized manner, but finding him already awake, shot a rapid glance around to insure that no listeners were near, and then began in a low, agitated voice:

"It was well that the Lord Duke, not being of the true faith, himself punished the thieving Hassan. I, Yussuf, have seen Hassan in the caravan, and have heard from the lips of one who speaks truth that the chief of the caravan is one of the same tribe. God is great, but a fear has sprung up in the heart of thy slave, even as a palm tree throwing a great shadow, for the dog of Hassan is cunning, and seeks the life of the Lord Duke."

On the fourth day, when the sun was at its fiercest, and the heat was so oppressive that Trevayne had to gasp for the breath that seemed to scorch his very lungs, the half dozen Arabs forming the advance guard were seen to suddenly converge to a point, and, after a brief consultation, turn their camels' heads and ride toward the caravan. Evidently something had been sighted, and that something might be the expected caravan, or it might be the dreaded Touaregs—those merciless pirates of the desert.

In an instant all was animation. The heat was forgotten. The camels were halted and the square formed as at night, while the motely collection of weapons with which the party were armed, comprising almost all kinds of firearms, were eagerly examined and made ready for use.

When these preparations were complete, and the outposts had been received into the square, a swirl of dust could be plainly seen advancing right down on to the caravan. Then the cloud of dust stopped and settled, and there rode out from it half a dozen Arabs, who soon made it known that their party, in fact, formed the looked for caravan.

In a very short time the members of the two caravans were ejaculating praises to the prophet and fraternizing in a most effusive manner. Trevayne was much struck by the gaunt, worn look of the new-comers. They had been away from home for two whole years, and their appearance showed that they had experienced the severest privations.

Far into the night the festivities extended, for the returning caravan would pass on its way on the morrow.

Every one was stirring very early the next morning, and preparations for the departure of the two caravans on their opposite courses were pushed forward with all speed. Yussuf had gone some little distance off to look after the baggage, when Trevayne saw Hassan walk up, and, after casting a malicious glance at him, go a few steps further on and say something in a hurried manner to the chief of the caravan, who was standing close by, and who at once turned and gazed at Trevayne with a deep frown on his dark, scarred face. Then, before Trevayne could realize what was happening, Hassan stepped up, and, thrusting his hand into the folds of Trevayne's haik, pretended to draw forth a small dagger. It was a veriest trick, most clumsily performed. The next moment, to Trevayne's utter amazement, he found himself surrounded by scowling Arabs, who, before he could defend himself in any way, pounced upon him, tied his hands behind him, and pushed him to where the chief was standing.

Now, however, the meaning of Hassan's insulting trick was apparent to Trevayne. No doubt the lying hound had professed to have discovered a plot to murder the chief, for whose benefit the daggar farce had evidently been enacted.

But he was wrong. Hassan's design was a far deeper one than he had conceived. Nor had he long to wait, before making the discovery, for Yussuf, hearing the hubbub, rushed to the spot. In a minute he had grasped the situation. Wringing his hands, he groveled at the feet of the chief and addressed him in tones of piteous entreaty. Trevayne glanced at the impassive Arab chief; at the imploring Yussuf; at his captors, armed to the teeth; at the motley crowd, attracted by the commotion; and the knowledge that he, the central figure, knew least about it all caused his impatience to break all bounds. In a loud voice he called Yussuf, who rose from the sand and slowly came toward his master. There was a look of despair in Yussuf's eyes as he cried:

"God is great, but the evil one is in our midst to work mischief. The dog of a thief has told the chief that thou—even thou, Lord Duke—hast stolen his dagger, and he asks that thou mayest be punished as one of the true faith."

Then the horror of the situation flashed upon Trevayne.

"Surely," he cried as his face paled—"Surely they won't cut my hands or burn out my eyes!" Then in a frenzy of fear he shouted: "Tell the chief that it was only a trick—tell him why that fiend did it—that he tried to murder me the other night."

Yussuf trembled. "Lord Duke," he said, sorrowfully, "I have done even as thou hast said, and more, also, but the chief will not listen. He says that his eyes can not lie."

"Tell him," cried Trevayne, in desperation, "that if I am harmed my people will come and kill him and all his tribe."

Yussuf translated the threat to the chief, who calmly replied:

"Kismet. It may come to pass even as the infidel sayeth. Let the infidel suffer the penalty of his crime." The chief made a sign with his hand, and went into his tent.

Justice is summarily dispensed in the desert. The sentence had been pronounced, and would be carried into effect on the spot. Trevayne was dragged forward. Three or four Arabs held him fast, while a couple more unbound his arms sufficiently to enable them to pull his hands over a bale of merchandise. One had brought a bowl of saltpeter, and another drew his knife ready to inflict the wounds which would effectually prevent the dog of an infidel from ever again robbing a true believer.

Trevayne had not tamely submitted to all this. Death he would have faced without turning a hair—but to be horribly maimed for life was far worse than death. And now brazier of char coal was brought, and Trevayne noticed with a thrill of terror that a small iron was sticking through the bars and was already nearly red-hot. Despite all his efforts to control himself the agony of his fear overcame him, and he struggled like a madman. It was useless. His hands were forced open and the knife was actually uplifted, when, suddenly, the chief reappeared, shouted a brief command, and strode back to his tent. To Trevayne's inexpressible joy and bewilderment the knife was slipped into its sheath and he was released from his bonds! Without another word he was hurried along to the homeward-bound caravan, which was already on the move.

Not until the caravan reached the Holy City did Trevayne become aware that Yussuf had not returned with him. After some deliberation on the subject, he came to the conclusion that the guide had been induced to throw in his lot with the outward-bound caravan. As to his own adventure, Trevayne decided that the Arabs had never intended to do anything more than frighten him.

On the morning of his intended departure for England, as he was finishing his breakfast at the hotel, he heard someone stumble into the passage leading to his room. He heard the intruder grope about outside, and then the door was pushed open. A native advanced into the room with a feeble, unsteady step. His head dropped forward, his chin upon his chest. Trevayne gazed curiously at his visitor, but in a moment his curiosity was replaced by pity, for he saw that there were black cavities where the man's eyes had been. He had evidently suffered the Arab's diabolical punishment for theft. Trevayne's heart was touched. Concluding that the man was a beggar, he put his hand in his pocket for some money to give him, saying, impulsively:

"My poor fellow ——"

But as the native approached, he stretched forth his hands imploringly, and Trevayne saw with a sickening feeling of horror that they were red and inflamed, and tightly closed. Blind and maimed for life! The remembrance of how narrowly and how inexplicably he had escaped the same terrible fate unmanned him. He was aroused by hearing a weak, quavering voice murmur, in heart-breaking accents of despair:

"They have burnt out my eyes, and never again shall I see thy face; and they have closed my hands and never again shall I open them—and thou, Lord Duke, thou knowest that I stole not the dagger!"

"Good God!" cried Trevayne, "Yussuf!"

IF THE BILL WAS GENUINE.

Recently a bishop of the Methodist Episcopal church returned from a tour of the South and made his headquarters at one of the big hotels uptown. To those who called upon him at the hotel he told a funny experience among the negroes of the South. He went down with a party to one of the fashionable winter resorts along the coast. One Sunday he was told of a Methodist church several miles inland. It was suggested that the party attend these services, and accordingly carriages were ordered and the drive was made. The rest of the story is best told in his own language. He said:—

"When we arrived at church we found that it was to be a sort of special service to raise money to pay off a church debt. They had recently erected a new church and it was only partly paid for. The local bishop had been summoned, and a great effort was being made to get the money. When we had taken our seats a colored brother came around and asked us if we would not go to the front, but we declined.

"In the course of his remarks the bishop dwelt upon the good work that had been done in the name of the Redeemer, and called upon every one present to contribute something toward paying off the great debt that the church had assumed in building a new house of worship. He said that the debt was $142.35, and that it must be met. His eloquent plea reached our hearts and we made up a little purse among ourselves and raised $100. The money was handed to me, and I, when the plate was passed around, laid a crisp hundred-dollar bill on the plate.

"While the money was being counted a song service was held. It was plainly evident to us that something unusual was going on, and there was a subdued air of excitement among those counting the money. Finally the bishop stepped to the front and raised his hand. The music ceased at once. He began to speak very gravely, and imagine our astonishment when he said:—

"Brethren: We have met with remarkable success in our efforts to-day. We have received enough money to pay off the debt, and a surplus of $14 12—that is, providin' the bill which the gentleman from the North gave us is genuine."—New York Tribune.

SAVED FROM A LION BY A PILLOW.—An English officer was shooting recently in Somaliland. One night, when he was in bed inside his tent, a lion sprang over the rough thorn fence, which it is usual to throw up round one's encampment at night. Instead of picking up one of the men or animals that must have been lying about asleep inside the fence, he would have none but the sportsman himself, made a dash into his tent, and seized him—fortunately only by the hand. Then, by some wonderful piece of luck, as the lion changed his grip for the shoulder, he grabbed the pillow instead, and so vanished with his prize. The pillow was found next morning several hundred yards distant in the jungle, and outside were also the spoor of a lioness, who had evidently been awaiting the return of her lord with something eatable.—*From Wild Beasts as They Live, by Capt. What Suited Him.

I'm sorter house-bound, sitting here beside the stove to-day,
With this 'ere cold! My wimmin folks says, "Pa, you're in the way!"
An' yet, they're usin' me first-rate. My wife has baked a pan
Of that 'ere Injun pudd'n—you may beat it if you can.
We never was no hands fer pie or pastry of no kind;
But we can clear more pudd'n up than any crowd you'll find.
Two tablespoons of Injun meal—of scalded milk a cup;
It makes a sort of chicken dough—just mix 'em gently up.
Then comes another quart of milk—three pints would be a waste—
An' then molasses, half a cup, or more to suit the taste;
An' then a lump of butter that will fill a tablespoon;
Then let it bake three solid hours—don't take it out too soon.
No eggs, no sugar—nothin' more in that 'ere recipe—
'Way back from Plymouth Rock that dish has come right down to me.
An' when I smell it cookin' in the oven, I tell you
That life puts on its reddest paint and covers up the blue.
Let others stuff on pie and cake—I won't have naught to say—
Give me an Injun pudd'n like my wife has cooked to day.

THE SLIM TEACHER.

"Mister, no doubt you have all the learning that's required in a school teacher, but it wants more than learnin' to make a man able to teach school in Cranberry Gulch. You'll soon find that out if you try. We've had three who tried it on. One lays there in the graveyard; another lost an eye, the last one opened school and left before noontide for the benefit of his health. He hasn't been back since. Now, you're a slender build, and all your learnin' will only make it worse, for all our younger folks are rough and don't stand no nonsense."

This was what one of the trustees of the district said to my friend Harry Flotoe, when he made application for the vacant position as teacher.

"Let me try. I know I am slender, but I am tough and I have a strong will," said Harry.

"Jest as you like. There's the school house, and I'll have notice given if you want it done," said the trustee.

"I do," said Harry, "and I'll open next Monday at 9 a. m."

The notice was given, and there was a good deal of excitement in the gulch and along the Yuba flats. More than fifty young people of both sexes made an excuse to drop into the tavern to get a sight at the fellow who thought he could keep school in that district, and many a contemptuous glance fell on the slender form and youthful face of the would-be-teacher.

Eight o'clock on Monday morning came, and Haray Flotoe went down to the schoolhouse with a key in one hand and a valise in the other.

"Ready to slope if he finds we're too much for him," said a cross-eyed, broad-shouldered fellow of eighteen.

The teacher went to his desk. Some of the young folks went to see what he was going to do, though school was not called.

Harry opened his valise and took out a large belt. Then, after buckling it round his waist, he put three Colt's navy revolvers therein with six barrels, and a bowie knife eighteen inches in the blade.

"Thunder! he means business!" muttered the cross-eyed chap.

The new teacher now took out a square card about four inches each way, walked to the other end of the school house and tacked it up against the wall. Returning to his desk, he drew a revolver from his belt, and, quick as thought, sent ball after ball into the card, till there were six balls in a spot not much larger than a silver dollar.

By this time the school house was half full of large boys and girls. The little ones were afraid to come in.

Then the teacher walked half way down the room with a bowie-knife in his hand, and threw it with so true a hand that it stuck quivering in the center of the card.

He left it there and quietly put two more of the same kind in his belt and reloaded his yet smoking pistol.

"Ring the bell; I am about to open school."

He spoke to the cross-eyed boy—the bully of the crowd—and the boy rang the bell without a word.

"The scholars will take their seats; I will open school with a prayer," he said sternly, five minutes later.

The scholars sat down silently, almost breathless. After the prayer the teacher cocked a revolver and walked down on the floor.

"We will arrange the classes," he said. "All who can read, write and spell, will rise. Of them we will form the first class."

Only six got up. He escorted them to the upper seats, and then he began to examine the rest. A whisper was heard behind him. In a second he wheeled, revolver in hand—

"No whispering allowed here!" he thundered, and for an instant his revolver lay on a level with the cross-eyed boy's head.

"I'll not do so any more," gasped the bully.

"See you do not. I never give a second warning," said the teacher, and the revolver fell.

It took two hours to organize the classes, but when done they were well organized.

Then came recess. The teacher went out too, for the room was crowded and hot. A hawk was circling overhead high in the air. The teacher drew his revolver and the next second the hawk came tumbling down among the wondering scholars.

From that day on, Harry kept school for two years in Cranberry Gulch, his salary doubled after the first quarter, and his pupils learned to love as well as respect him, and the revolvers were out of sight within a month.

They found a man at last who could keep school. This is a fact.—Exchange.

SHE THOUGHT SHE UNDERSTOOD.—The following story is told of a precocious little girl of 10. She is the daughter of a well-known lady of considerable charms, whom the family doctor was visiting for influenza. He felt the pulse gravely and tenderly, holding her wrist after the orthodox manner of a ladies' doctor, as he sat beside her in the drawing room. As he did so he became aware that the child had her great grave eyes, full of inquiry, fixed upon him.

"You don't know what I'm doing?" said the medical man, lightly, to the young lady.

"Yes—I do," was the portentiously solemn reply. "You are making love to my mother!"—London Tit-Bits.

"Call the next case!" thundered the rural justice. "The next," said the shivering bailiff, "is a case o' Christmas liquor that I have levied on," yer honor. "That is a case," replied the justice, sternly, "which demands private investigation, and I shall reserve my decision until after the holidays. Clear the court!"—Atlanta Constitution.

The Journal.

FRIDAY EVENING, FEBRUARY 28, 1896.

IT IS reported that Governor Altgeld of Illinois can have a renomination if he wants it, but that he says he won't take it. What!

TO THE credit of the United States be it said that the sluggers which met last Friday could find no place on her soil where they could fight. May we have seen the last of such.

WITH a known deficiency of $20,000,000 in the revenues for the fiscal year and the probability that the amount will be even larger, Congress refuses to have anything to do with the tariff bill.

GOVERNOR GREENHALGE, who has not been at the state house since the 7th on account of sickness, is suffering from nervous prostration and has been ordered to go South for a rest. It is hoped that his recovery will be speedy and sure.

WHEN Earl Dunraven failed to sustain his charges against the Defender regarding the international yacht races last fall after a fair hearing, he should have either apologized or resigned from the New York Yacht club, but with his characteristic obstinancy he refused to do either, and the club has now expelled him.

A BOOM has been inaugurated this week for Richard Olney as a Democratic candidate for the presidency, and has attained quite sizable proportions. The statement is also out this week that Mr. Cleveland is not a candidate for a renomination, with the promise that he will make it authoritative in the near future.

THE whole state mourns the death of ex-Governor George D. Robinson, which occurred at his Chicopee home last Saturday. And not alone Massachusetts, but wherever his name and worth were known, and they were widespread. There are few public servants who attain so warm a place in the hearts of so many people as did this man.

IT SEEMS almost impossible that seven persons should be burned to death in an ordinary dwelling house at 8 o'clock in the morning, and yet that is what took place last Sunday in Baltimore. The flames made such rapid progress after their discovery that of the sixteen persons who were in the upper part of the house only nine escaped, egress by way of the stairs being quickly shut off.

THERE are rumors that President Cleveland, in spite of the importunities from many sources, will take no action regarding the affairs in Cuba until June. It is understood that he will give Spain a reasonable time in which to crush the rebellion there,—or until the beginning of the rainy season, June. If the revolutionists can hold out until that time it is thought the president will then intervene.

CHICAGO is responsible for some queer freaks. The minister of the Immanuel Baptist church of that city, who recently announced that no negro children will be baptized in his church, is now out with a statement that poverty and sorrow are the result of deliberate sin, and are not entitled to much sympathy. He announces that "if I had $1000 to distribute where it would do the most good, I would spend $900 for Bibles and tracts and ministers' salaries, and $10 for bread. Fortunately all do not have the same opinions as Rev. Johnston Myers.

A FINE of $500 and three hours in jail was imposed on Miss Flagler of Washington, who about six months ago shot and killed a colored boy who was stealing pears from her father's orchard. The fine was paid and the three hours were spent in the matron's room at the jail, in the presence of friends. The verdict was "involuntary manslaughter." There is no doubt but that the shooting was accidental, but would the verdict have been the same had the unfortunate young woman belonged to a less influential and poorer class, is a question which will seem pertinent to many.

THERE is trouble in the Salvation Army at New York which may lead to the establishment of an independent organization in this country. The whole of the forces, in all parts of the world, are under the control of General Booth at London; Commander Ballington Booth and wife, who have been in charge of the forces in this country, were ordered to England, but declined, and resigned from the army. Much pressure has been brought to bear upon them, urging the formation of an independent organization in the United States, by those whose close study of the work of the Booths has convinced them that the ordered removal to another command was against the best interests of the work here.

THE Republicans of the town of Palmer should not fail to attend the caucus next Wednesday night. Failure to do so will mean the defeat of a large proportion of the candidates nominated. It is pretty generally understood that the A. P. A. intends to show its strength and try and control certain nominations. That the order has any material strength in Palmer is not believed by those who are best in position to know; the danger will be in the carelessness of the Republicans in not attending the caucus and allowing a possible controling of it by the members of the A. P. A. and those who are to be found in every caucus opposing the officers of the year just closing. One thing is certain, any A. P. A. nomination, or any which is known to have the endorsement of that order, is sure to be defeated at the polls.

The Coming Republican Caucus.

Matters pertaining to the coming town meeting have been rather quiet during the past week, and but little that is new has developed. Especially is this true regarding the candidates likely to be nominated for selectmen next Wednesday by the Republicans. In addition those mentioned last week, the name of Mr. C. F. Grosvenor has been presented as one which would find favor with many voters. He however, as well as those previously mentioned,—Messrs. Hobbs, Hastings, Fish and Dillon,—have expressed themselves in favor of the renomination and election of the present board, and it is doubtful if they will allow their names to be considered. They certainly will not as against any of the present board.

As overseer of the poor William Merriam will no doubt receive the endorsement and renomination which his long and faithful service for the town deserves. It will be hard to find one who will keep a keener watch over the town's interests than has Mr. Merriam.

There are three members of the school committee to be voted for this year, two for three years and one for two years. The terms of Messrs. Breckenridge, Hobbs and Chandler expire this year, and their names will probably be presented for consideration at the caucus.

For assessors Messrs. Studley and Bishop are likely to be renominated, and it would not be surprising if J. O. Hamilton was given a place on the ticket under this heading, there being an apparent disposition to rectify the mistake made last year by dropping him from the board of assessors and nominating him for selectman. He has had experience on the board, and has given good satisfaction.

The town clerk and treasurer, J. B. Shaw, will of course be renominated. A new name for tax collector will be brought forward at the caucus, A. E. Fitch being a candidate for that office.

Three members of the board of health must be elected, one for three, one for two and one for one year. No names have been heard mentioned for this position, though there will probably be no opposition to the present board, Drs. Holbrook, Smith and Bliss.

PALMER NEWS.

Had to Pay for the Horse.

The famous Percheron stallion case bobbed up serenely again this week in a suit in the superior court by the Limerick National bank of Limerick, Me., against C. P. Haynes, J. F. Twiss, J. M. Allen and others of Palmer to compel payment on a note of $933, dated April 2d, 1894, and due one year later.

In the spring of 1894 one H. P. Reynolds appeared in Palmer with a scheme to sell a Percheron stallion to a stock company. The shares were $100 each, and it was represented that large dividends could be earned on the investment by using the horse for breeding purposes. Westfield horsemen had just passed through an experience with a company of the same kind which left them many dollars poorer, and the case had been well ventilated in the papers, but about 20 joined the Palmer company and bought the horse. Some money was paid in, and the balance was represented by joint and several notes, which read that "we or either of us" would be responsible for the payment. As was predicted by many from the first, the horse proved practically worthless for the purpose for which he was bought, there being little demand for the animal, and he did not earn his keeping. None of the signers of the note would take the animal, and finally he was sold. In the meantime the note had been disposed of to the Maine bank, but when it came due the signers refused payment on the grounds that Reynolds had sold them a worthless horse; that if the note was signed it was never delivered; if it was executed it was given without consideration; if executed it was agreed that it should not be considered binding till other signatures were obtained, and they were not obtained. Some of the parties against whom the suit was brought had in the meantime paid Reynolds money to be released from obligation on the note, but had neglected to secure the note. The suit was for $1500, and a verdict of $485 was rendered.

An Interesting Combination.

Polanders, beer, politics and a flatiron proved a combination which created no little excitement at Thorndike Monday night, the last chapter of which was enacted in the district court Tuesday morning. Staney Check and Peter Charnasky, one a Russian and the other an Austrian Polander, got outside of some beer and then into a political discussion. There is no love lost between the inhabitants of the two sections, and the native of one who is accused of belonging to the other feels much as does the average American at being called an A. P. A. So when Charnasky made the statement that Staney was a native of the same section with himself, Staney's righteous indignation and the beer rose up within him, and the "scrap" which ensued was, judging from reports, of considerable more interest and length than the recent one in New Mexico. Both men were in a fair way to suffer the fate of the famous Kilkenny cats, when Staney secured a flatiron and laid his antagonist out. Officer Luman was called about this time, and when he arrived found Charnasky lying on the floor, which much resembled that of a slaughter house, while Staney was being held by half a dozen men. In the court next morning an attempt was made to settle damages with the injured man, who wanted $50 for an inch-long cut on his head, which a physician said would be all right in a week, but Staney thought he'd save the money and take a jail sentence of two months, which through the misunderstanding of the interpreter he was made to think was the alternative. The court imposed a fine of $15, or two months, and the fine was paid. Charnasky wasn't satisfied, as the average Polander's idea of having an arrest made is to get damages from the victim, and he didn't seem to be getting rich in this instance.

Death of Mrs. Esther E. Frost.

Mrs. Esther E. Frost, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Merriam of Palmer, and well known here, died at her home in Springfield Tuesday afternoon, at the age of 45. Mrs. Frost had been in feeble health for several years, but her last illness was thought to be the result of work which she undertook in connection with the recent fair of St. Paul's Universalist church in Springfield, in which she was a faithful worker, and in which she leaves a wide circle of mourners. For several months Mrs. Frost had studied the subject of cremation, and in accordance with her wishes the body was incinerated at Boston yesterday afternoon.

Mrs. Frost was born at Fitzwilliam, N. H., in 1851. Her grandfather, Otis Whitcomb, was Denman Thompson's original in the "Old Homestead," very many of his pet sayings and doings, as well as his kindly character, being given by Mr. Thompson in his play. Mrs. Frost married Daniel C. Frost, who died several years ago. She had two sons, William, who died, and Victor, who is employed by the United States Express company in Springfield. Besides her parents, Mrs. Frost leaves a sister, Mrs. J. F. Holbrook of Palmer.

Since the publication a few weeks ago of the item regarding the loss of customers by a local merchant who was suspected of sympathy for the A. P. A. movement because members of that order had been in the habit of dropping into his store to chat, several merchants on Main street have been suspected, wrongfully, as the JOURNAL knows, of being friendly toward the order simply because some of its members have been seen together in those stores several times. The merchants cannot well deny these persons admission to their places of business, even if their sentiments are known, which is not always the case. This is one of the times when a man is not known by the company in which he may be found.

The overseers of the poor give the following figures regarding that branch of the town's expenses for the past year: Support of poor not on town farm, $4112 64; poor on town farm, (net) $1538 05; poor belonging to the state, $405.58; belonging to other towns, $479.56; tramp room, $216 85; total, $6752 68. From this amount should be subtracted the cost of the poor belonging to the state and other towns, as this is paid back to the town of Palmer, which leaves the net cost to the town of Palmer, $5867 54. The cash received at the town farm during the year from various sources, such as the sale of butter, eggs, work done for the town and individuals, etc., was $1812.41, a most excellent showing, bringing the net cost of supporting the inmates down to $1.37 per week each.

Robert G. Ingersoll, whose fame as an orator and as an opponent of revealed religion is as wide as the universe, will deliver one of his most brilliant lectures, "Liberty of Man, Woman and Child," at Odd Fellows' opera house, Saturday evening, March 9. In the delivery of this lecture the genial and fascinating Colonel is seen at his best. The subject affords him unusual opportunities for the display of those rare oratorical gifts which have astonished and dazzled the world. He uses no manuscript, and his discourse has all the charm of spontaneity. Col. Ingersoll's career as a disputant of religious creeds is well known from the time he attacked dogmatic institutions twenty years ago down to the present. Many of the views to which he then gave utterance were regarded as "advanced." To-day they are accepted by many as being logical, proving that he was then but the vanguard in a new field of thought. Ingersoll believes in liberty—that liberty that makes the individual and community happier and better—and it is of this liberty he will speak on the occasion of his now rapidly approaching visit here. As Col. Ingersoll has devoted many years of study and observation to the preparation of this lecture, it will undoubtedly be accepted by his admirers hereabouts as his masterpiece in thought, satire, wit, trenchant argument and wealth of language.

A Few Words to My Fellow-Townsmen of the Catholic Church.

Dear Neighbors and Friends :—Will you suffer a few words from one who writes them from a heart full of anxiety? It is no news to you that I am deeply interested with many others of all creeds in the effort to remove from our midst those deadly evils, the saloons. I have seen the majority for license fall from 101 in 1893 to 69 in 1894, and to 17 in 1895. I know, as you do also, that the sentiment of this town is now strongly against the saloons, and that nothing can keep them here after May 1st if this sentiment shall truly express itself on March 16th.

We all know that there are many strong no-license men among the Catholics of this town, and that many of them will vote No in spite of everything. But I am told that some of you are contemplating voting for license contrary to your real sentiments, for the purpose of somehow opposing in this way the A. P. A. I can scarcely believe such a thing possible, but this has come to me in such a way as to compel me to believe that it is to some extent true. I wish to appeal to you for the sake of everything good, for the sake of all our homes and all our interests, for the sake of our Blessed Saviour who died to save men from sin's curse, to consider the matter carefully before taking such a course.

You all know my position as to religious matters in town affairs, taken and advocated both publicly and privately. I publicly advocated the nomination and election of a Catholic priest of this town on our board of education, because I believed him to be a good man for the place, and that the question of creed should not enter into town matters except to the extent of treating all fairly. I stand by this principle, and shall stand by this act as long as he proves himself personally fit for the position. I believe in the test of ability and character, and in no other in such matters. I am a Protestant, but I am no bigot and never expect to be.

I most earnestly entreat you to consider this matter carefully in all its bearings, to vote your real sentiments, and not to be led by anyone or anything to an act that will harm us all most grievously. Will you take into consideration the following points?

1. The members of the A. P. A. are a very small minority of the Protestants of Palmer, and in no way represent the Protestant churches.
2. That the license issue and the A. P. A. issue are absolutely distinct.
3. That a license vote would not suppress or check the A. P. A. movement in the least.
4. If it should become evident that the town is kept in the grip of the saloons by the power of the Catholic church, the A. P. A. will have an argument that will be used with great effect. I do not see how either you or I could answer it.
5. Is it not your true and better course to rise above the impulse to revenge which has been represented as now swaying you, and to join heart, soul and votes in this great moral movement? Will not both your happiness and your interests be advanced in the year to come by showing that Catholics are so patriotic, so loyal to the town of which they are a part, and so Christian in their standards that nothing can move you from your high moral purpose?
6. Remember the eloquent words of Father Hart spoken a year ago. I am informed by responsible persons that he has said within a few days to them personally, that he stands just where he did last year, and does not take back a word spoken at that time.

I have lived to little purpose in this town for the past three years, if you do not understand the spirit in which I write this. I have taken counsel of no human being about it. I have simply written it out of a full heart, anxious to save your children and ours from becoming drunkards and drunkards' wives, and I can trust your generosity in interpreting this letter in the loving spirit in which it is written. The same vote as you gave last year will, with the added strength from the year of thought and work, close our saloons by a large majority. Even the saloon men know there is no hope but in your voting contrary to your real sentiments, and they are doing all they can to foment strife. The whole town is waiting to see what you will decide to do, and the outcome, whether for the saloons or against them, will be credited to you in the future thinking of this town.

I have prayed God to bless this crude letter and to use it in some way to draw us all closer together in mutual forbearance and helpfulness. I hope that from the 16th of next month it shall ever be said in our fair town that the Catholic and Protestant churches are solid against the saloons, and that the last vote for license in Palmer was in 1895.

Yours sincerely,
FRANK E. JENKINS.

Palmer, Feb. 26, 1896.

THE CITIZEN IN THE TOWN.

A Few Thoughts for Practical People.

The JOURNAL gladly makes room for the following paper, read by Mr. J. C. Wing at the Sunday Evening club's service in the Congregational church last Sunday evening, believing that it will prove interesting and helpful to every voter of the town:

So nearly allied to the home is the town, that whatever is said of the citizen in the home, largely is applicable to the citizen in the town. It is an unalterable fact that without the home there can be no town or true self-government, and hence no state or national life. Let us bear in mind that the term "citizen" includes women as well as men, and woman's influence and responsibility is considered as equal to that of man's and quite as effective, but in somewhat different lines.

The birthright of a citizen is a noble heritage, and imposes obligations and duties that cannot be shirked or neglected with impunity. The town must be founded on pure manhood or womanhood, underlying which must be the spirit and principles contained in the Book of Books. Hence it follows that its citizens should maintain pure and unspotted characters, above suspicion, and an integrity that can be relied upon without question; whose word shall be as good as their bond, and who can be depended upon to faithfully fulfil all obligations to their fellows, however small and seemingly unimportant, for great events are often largely influenced by the performance or non-performance of seemingly little things. Constantine the Great said, "Little things are little things, but to be faithful in little things is something great." So the citizen who would do well for the town must be careful of all the small affairs, the small amenities and courtesies, and also the small bills of every-day life; at the same time not neglecting the more important matters.

The right of citizenship does not by any means constitute the true citizen, in the best sense of the word, any more than the right to be a musician makes a musician, or the right to acquire riches makes one rich. It is the privilege that is granted, and not the consummation; earnest effort must ensue, to attain the goal. Self must be by diligent and continued study of the duties and obligations of man to his fellow-man, of the principles of self-government, of the rights of others, of self-restraint and justice tempered with mercy, that the individual comes toward true citizenship and acquires ability to take part effectively in town affairs. If the elective franchise gave the privilege of merely casting a vote, it would be a beggarly affair Citizens do not live the life of political freedom in the polling booth only, but in the weeks and months between elections, when the voter should study the needs of his town and learn what is wanted and who are the right men to execute the best measures; then he votes intelligently and with freedom, for he has been voting mentally all the year.

Schools and libraries should be liberally provided for. Suitable and well-ventilated school buildings are a prime necessity, and all the thought and care about these important matters should not be shouldered upon the school committee and superintendent. Every citizen should feel a personal interest that all the appliances are practical and thorough. It is too great an expenditure of strength and vitality to allow teachers and scholars to pass their school hours in any surroundings but the best within the ability of the citizens to furnish. The best work will be done and most satisfactory progress made, in connection with the best facilities. Cooperation with and encouragement of the teachers and officers of the schools is an incentive to earnest efforts; visits to the schoolroom by citizens should not be neglected. No nobler work for the town can be accomplished than by rearing a generation of well-educated, pure-minded and healthful Christian people, and citizens are bound by the obligations of their birthright to contribute toward this to the best of their ability, by precept, example, and material aid.

The need of roads for business, pleasure riding, and for the transportation of products of the farm and mill, is obvious. The life and prosperity of a town is largely measured by the quality of its roads. History tells us that at an early period a coach and four, in England, flew at the rate of fourteen miles in fifteen hours. We may smile at this, and yet, in how many country towns are the citizens reduced almost to this rate of traveling, during the early spring People have become so accustomed to dirt roads, as they are properly called, that they hardly expect anything better. Little improvement in town road making has been evidenced in the last half century,—a few instances excepted, and those occurring within the last decade. Is it not the duty of citizens to see to it without further delay, that steps are taken to secure the building of permanently good roads? Materials for this, in New England at least, are abundant and accessible. Can citizens, on economic principles, afford to tolerate poor roads?

In some towns by-laws have been enacted making it a misdemeanor to drop paper or allow rubbish on the streets or roads. This is a step in the right direction, and all good citizens will endorse it.

The board of health is an adjunct in maintaining good order and cleanliness, and should be earnestly seconded in their laudable efforts to promote the welfare of the town. The good and wholesome rules left by them at every door should be carefully studied and promptly complied with, thus encouraging the board to do their best. A cleanly town is to be desired, and will be sought for at a price commensurate with its value. A little care and thought will produce a great improvement in this direction. Let every one build over against his own door.

Patronizing home trade, home institutions and interests, should be the pleasant duty of every citizen, thus helping our fellows, and incidently helping ourselves.

Every citizen, whether old or young, should be a watchman upon the walls of the town to prevent the introduction of anything that will in any way demoralize or debauch. No man, woman or child who is thoughful can remain neutral and stand clear before their own conscience. The question to decide is, what will build up the citizenship of the town to a high moral, physical and intellectual standard, and give it men and women of the best and purest type? Whatever will, should be welcomed and aided in all practical ways. Whatever will not, should be banished from the town by the strong arm of pure citizenship. The citizens of this town will be called upon to decide upon one important phase of this question next month, and the results of the decision cannot be measured. Temporary profit or seemingly pecuniary gain should not weigh at all; such considerations are not paramount. The cheapness of a foundation is not the question with the true architect, but its permanence. So with the town:—Good morals, good practices, good institutions should be contended for, and nothing allowed that will contravene these.

The father of our country, whose birthday has just passed, gave the best part of his life to establish a government whose office should be to produce true citizenship, and we shall best honor his memory by perpetuating the principles for which he labored.

Death of Dwight M. Stebbins.

Another familiar personage has passed away from Three Rivers in the death of Dwight Mason Stebbins, who died there Feb. 16th. He was born in Wilbraham, Aug. 7th, 1811, so was in his 85th year. He was descended from Rowland Stebbins of Cambridge, England, and later of Springfield, Mass. He was twice married, first to Tryphena Sikes of Belchertown, Sept. 19th, 1838; she died Nov. 24th, 1840. He married, April 15, 1841, Sophia Ball. An only son, Henry N., of New Haven, survives him. He came to Palmer in 1835 to work at his trade of carpenter, and settled in Three Rivers in 1845, where he has since resided, and since which time he has been in the employ and pay of the Otis Co., for during the last years of his life the company generously continued his pay as a proof of their appreciation of his long and faithful service of half a century. During the time which intervened between the burning and rebuilding of the mill at Three Rivers, he was employed at the Thorndike mill, and walked 10,916 miles to and from his daily work. The town, appreciating his strong common sense, elected him successfully as a member of the school board from 1862 to 1865. He was a justice of the peace many years, down to the time of his death. He also performed considerable public business, such as writing conveyances, etc., besides settling many estates. He retained his mental acumen till the last. He was a devout Christian, although not a member of any church; exemplary in all his dealings with men, upright in character, leaving not a stain to tarnish his memory. Need more be said of any man who has striven to perform well his appointed work as a man, a citizen, and a Christian.

Mrs. A. M. Bond, while shopping in Springfield last week, had her pocketbook containing a sum of money stolen from a handbag while she was busy making purchases in a store. Editor of the Journal:—Referring to an article in your last issue regarding a certain element which is said to exist in town, and which, it is claimed, is hostile to the re-election of Mr. C. H. Hobbs of this place as a member of the school committee, I am confident that as a citizen I voice the sentiment of the voters of this village when I assert that he has the confidence and esteem of all. Every right-thinking and intelligent voter of this village will support him for any office for which he may be nominated, and will feel honored by the opportunity to do so.

NEIGHBORHOOD NOTES.

MONSON.

Death of Mrs Hannah Darling.

Mrs. Hannah Darling, widow of Sylvanus Darling, died last Friday evening at her South Main street home. Although Mrs. Darling had been confined to her room only a few weeks, her ill health covered a period of several months. The funeral was held Monday afternoon, Rev. W. H. Marble officiating. The burial was in the Center cemetery. The bearers were Edward F. Cushman, William J. Ricketts, George L Keeney and Frank E. Morris. The flowers were many and beautiful, and included a basket sent by Marcus Keep Women's Relief corps.

Mrs. Darling was born at Andover 64 years ago. The greater part of her married life was spent in Monson, although for a time the family lived at Wales. Mr. Darling was employed for a number of years in the factory of Horatio Lyon, and afterward as superintendent of the R. M. & T. The Republican town committee has reorganized as follows: Chairman, Charles W. King, secretary, Ralph Clifford; treasurer, Lyman C. Flynt. The occasional groups of citizens seen on our streets, in the post office and the stores, talking town affairs, indicate that there is an election in the not far distant future. The town year closes next Monday, and all bills must be presented at that time.

The children sent written invitations to their friends to be present at the public exercises in some of the schools during the past week, and the good attendance has been very gratifying to the teachers, as well as the children. The bell which, as near as can be ascertained, has rung for 75 years in the Bridge mill now owned by R. M. & T. Reynolds, was on Tuesday replaced by one of heavier and more musical tone. The bell removed was the oldest in town, and although somewhat worn about the neck and edges, would probably have lasted for many years to come. The mill also is the oldest one in operation, having been erected about 1815 by the Hampden company, which manufactured cotton goods on hand looms. In 1845 the building was enlarged, the main part to 60 feet in length and four stories in height, and changed over to the manufacture of satinet. Later the property was purchased by Joseph L. Reynolds, who had been since 1821 a member of the company. He made many improvements, and the business was greatly increased. At his death the property passed into the possession of his sons, the present owners. During these years the bell in the old loft has pealed forth many a story of fire in the sister mills. The one built in 1829 by the Hampden company where the Ellis mill now stands, and on the same site one built by C. W. Holmes & Sons in 1867; the one built by J. L. Reynolds in 1857; the one built by the Monson Woolen company about the year 1815, and the one at North Monson built in 1811. This mill, used in late years as a storehouse, was the first mill built in Monson.

A Democratic caucus was held last Friday evening and the following candidates were nominated: Clerk, William Snow; treasurer, Arthur Bridgman; school committee for one year, Mrs. Maria Longley; three years, George Canterbury; selectmen, George Sanford, Amasa Baggs, Michael Bowler.

It is thought that there will be a close contest at the town meetings this year between the Republican and Democratic candidates. For selectmen the members of the old board are up. These are Nelson Randall, M. S. Barton, A. C. Smith, George Stafford and Michael P. Bowler. Considerable interest centers in the election of members of the school committee. There are two vacancies on the board and three candidates for the positions. Mrs. Maria S. Longley, nominated for one year, is a graduate of Mount Holyoke College, and is well fitted for the position, having taught Latin and English literature for several years. Capt. John Anderson, another candidate, is a veteran of the war, and for the past two years has made his home in Belchertown. G. W. Canterbury, the third candidate, is from South Belchertown. He is an architect by trade, and has served in the capacity of selectman.

The overseers of the poor have secured the services of Moses S. Murray and wife as warden and matron at the poor farm. Treffle Charboneau, who was shot in the head by a pistol in the hands of Lewis Shea, in Stevens' mill on Thursday of last week, died on Saturday from the effects of the wound. While the shooting was no doubt accidental, and it is not probable that any arrest will be made, it does seem as though some action should be taken as a warning to prevent boys from carrying loaded revolvers.

Mrs. Diana P. Lemon died at the home of her sister, Mrs. Daniel C. Marsh, on Sunday night, after quite a long illness from cancer. Mrs. Lemon was born at Ware, and has been for many years a member of the Methodist church. Her husband, Charles Lemon, died some years ago. The funeral was held on Wednesday, Rev. A. M. Osgood officiating, and the burial was at Aspen Grove cemetery.

LEGISLATIVE MATTERS.

BOSTON, Feb. 26, 1896.

It has never happened before, according to the statement of Speaker Meyer, that the funeral of an ex-governor has come at a time when the Legislature would usually be in session. Hence no precedent existed for their guidance in the case of ex-Governor Robinson's funeral on Wednesday. Some of the leading members of the House were disposed to sit without regard to the obsequies of our distinguished public servant, but it was the judgment of both President Lawrence and Speaker Meyer that it would be more fitting to the occasion for the Legislature not to do its business. This did not hinder the sitting of committees, and sessions were accordingly held as usual on Wednesday forenoon.

Probably the feeling on the part of the Legislature was due to the prominence of Gov. Robinson in the present life of the state. He was not a citizen laid on the shelf by old age or infirmity, but he was in the vigor of his powers and was looked up to by a great many men in the state as a strong Republican leader, even to-day, though he had retired to private life. I question whether the Legislature would have adjourned out of respect to the memory of ex-Gov. Gardner, or ex-Gov. Banks, if his death had chanced to occur at the time of ex-Gov. Robinson's, for there is a difference in the estimation in which public men are held. But now that the precedent has been established, it may be followed when the lamented dead is of less rank in the popular mind than George D. Robinson was.

The traditions which Gov. Robinson left at the state house were of the most agreeable sort. He was thoroughly democratic in his ways. There always clung to him something of the air of the schoolmaster which he could never wholly outgrow. He was not of the nature to unbend himself wholly to the popular level, though there was not a man whom it was easier to approach. He lacked ostentation in public life. He was the furthest removed from his immediate predecessor, who insisted upon the title of "supreme executive magistrate," and who was fond of posing in the public eye. Robinson was strongminded and positive in his convictions, and was conscientious in the discharge of his public duties. At the dinner of the Boston Congregational club on Monday evening, Edwin D. Mead said of him that he was a distinctly religious man, and that he rarely missed going from Boston to Chicopee, on Saturday, when he was governor, in order to teach his Sunday school class the next day. Surely there have been few of our recent governors of whom the same con'd be said. He was a man who was accustomed to doing his own work for himself. He found it difficult to employ a private secretary at first. He used to write his messages with his own hand, and used to do a great deal of work in his first term which he afterwards learned to put upon his subordinates, with no detriment to the public service. He was one of the strong men of the state, and he will be missed, though he was no longer in public life.

The committee on taxation has ended its hearings upon the exemption of foreign stocks from taxation, and will next week take up the question of the exemption of municipal bonds. The hearings have been shortened this year materially, only five having been given where about a dozen were last year. It is said that ex-Senator Durant, the counsel for the Anti-Double Taxation League and also its president, is more direct in managing and speaking than Richard H. Dana was, and hence the hearings have covered the same ground in less time. The struggle is really more vigorous this year than it was last, because of the attitude of the merchants' municipal committee of Boston. Though there is no connection between this committee and the Anti-Double Taxation League, yet each organization is for the further exemption of personal property. The committee wants to make a change which would at once add 20 per cent to the present tax on real estate, trusting to the distribution of that tax over other interests to make it equitable for the entire community. But of course this very proposition will make it encounter the strenuous opposition of all who will feel the force of the 20 per cent, but will not be by any means as clear about the other part of the theory. Hence it is not at all likely that the movement will succeed. Perhaps in the future, after several years more of discussion and after a demonstration by the rich men that they do not seek for this exemption in order to increase the taxes of the poor, they may persuade a majority of the Legislature that it will be for the interest of the state to pass the bill. But until there has been some such demonstration, it is probable that the scheme will be defeated, no matter whether it comes from a Democratic mayor of Boston, as it does this year, or whether the same body of men, practically, should present the same petition through the cabinet of some Republican mayor.

In the one contested election case in the House which has been carried to a finish, the majority of the House were in favor of seating the Democrat. The whole issue was whether the intent of the voter could be reasonably ascertained. Some of the members thought it could, and that the vote ought to be continued for the Republican, making a tie and involving a new election. Others said that it ought not to be counted at all, leaving the Democrat with one majority and settling the case. It was conceded all around that if a new election were held the Democrat would be elected. The district is decidedly Democratic, and only a quarrel gave the Republican his large vote. But they threw the ballot out and let in the Democrat.

The marble bust of Gov. Greenhalge by the artist Kitson, which has been on exhibition for some weeks and will be presented in the House on Friday, is the gift of the people of Lowell. The state is much better provided with portraits of her governors than with their busts, for the bust of Gov. Boutwell, which used to stand in the state library and has been stored in the new library recently, is the only gubernatorial bust in the possession of the state. A plaster bust of Governor Long used to stand on a pedestal in the old library, and is now stored in the new one. It was the work of a moulder named Pierre Millet, the brother of the French artist, who was desirous of trying his hand on so good a subject as John D. Long. But it was never regarded as specially fine bust. It is said that Millet probably gave it to the governor. When the latter went out of office he gave the bust to Librarian Tillinghast, who set it on the pedestal where stood a bust of John Todd. Nobody knew who Todd was, and it became so annoying to explain repeatedly who he was that the librarian thought it would be better to put up the counterfeit presentment of a man who would be recognized by the people. But the state never paid anything for the bust and it has never had any official position. There are plenty of portraits of the old governors, the most recent of which were obtained by the unpaid commission of which Samuel J. Elder was chairman. They were given by the family friends at their own expense, and the state gives them a first-rate position. A marble bust of Gov. Ames is all ready for presentation to the state, and it will probably be sent up before long. It was finished before the ex-governor died. Besides these, there is a marble bust of Lucy Stone, which her friends wish to give to the state. When the new memorial hall is finished there will be a suitable place for exhibiting these memorials of the distinguished people of Massachusetts, but there is no suitable place now. From the present rush for statues on the state house grounds, it would seem as if all the niches in the temple of fame and all the available spots on her lawn besides would be filled by present candidates, leaving no place for future aspirants.

The woman suffragists are making a great show with their petitions, both for municipal and general suffrage, but it does not yet appear how much will be the effect of the vote last fall against the proposition. Each side claims a great victory, and only the action of the Legislature will reveal what was its practical outcome. The bearings have not been begun yet, but the petitioners number several thousands. LANDON.

It is understood that a party of prospectors will leave Boston on March 12th, via the Boston & Maine, Central Vermont, Grand Trunk, Chicago & Grand Trunk, Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific, and the Denver & Rio Grande railways, for a trip to Cripple Creek and return. A new novel by GEORGE DU MAURIER, entitled The Martain, will also begin during the year. It is not too much to say that no novel has ever been awaited with such great expectation as the successor to Trilby. The Personal Recollections of Joan of Arc will continue and will relate the story of the failure and martyrdom of the Maid of Orleans. Other important fiction of the year will be a novelette by MARK TWAIN, under the title, Tom Sawyer, Detective; a humorous three-part tale called Two Mormons from Muddlety, by LANGDON ELWYN MITCHELL; and short stories by OCTAVE THANET, RICHARD HARDING DAVIS, MARY E. WILKINS, JULIAN RALPH, BRANDER MATTHEWS, OWEN WISTER, and other well-known writers.

POULTNEY BIGELOW'S history of The German Struggle for Liberty, illustrated by R. CATON WOODVILLE, will be continued through the winter. Two papers on St. Clair's defeat and Mad Anthony Wayne's victory, by THEODORE ROOSEVELT, with graphic illustrations will be printed during the year.

A noteworthy feature of the MAGAZINE during 1896 will be a series of articles by CASPAR W. WHITNEY, describing his trip of 2000 miles on snow-shoes and with dog-sledge trains into the unexplored Barren Grounds of British North America in pursuit of wood-bison and musk-oxen. Mr. WHITNEY'S series will have the added interest of being illustrated from photograps taken by himself.

Gravel Cured.

(Philadelphia, Penn., Item.)

A healthier, heartier, happier man than John J. Neill, of 2437 North Eighth street, Philadelphia, could not be found in a day's search. The fact that he is still alive is a constant wonder to his friends.

In the fall of 1889 he began to suffer indescribable miseries from stone in the bladder. Consulting an eminent physician in Philadelphia, he was told that a surgical operation was necessary. So much did he dread the result, for if unsuccessful it meant death, that he put off the evil day as long as possible. While in this frame of mind, he heard of

DR. DAVID KENNEDY'S FAVORITE REMEDY

Although disheartened, on July 1, 1893, he bought a bottle of it, and within a month had experienced beneficial results, and before he had finished the third bottle, the gravel was completely dissolved and his sufferings at an end.

Mr. Neill feels that he owes a lasting debt of gratitude to Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy, and for disorders of the bladder and urinary organs, says "it will effect a cure if one be possible."

Favorite Remedy is prescribed with unfailing success for rheumatism, dyspepsia and nervous troubles, in which it has cured many who were considered beyond the aid of medicine. All druggists, $1.

LARRABEE'S RHEUMATIC LINIMENT

A standard and sovereign household remedy for over half a century. It is a wonderful curative agent in all painful diseases, such as

Rheumatism, Lumbago, Neuralgia, Backache, Catarrh, Toothache,

and other painful ailments. To be had of all druggists, or by mail on receipt of 25 cents. Trade supplied by Geo. C. Goodwin & Co., or any wholesale druggist.

The Calf Path.

One day through the primeval wood,
A calf walked home, as good calves should,

But made a trail all bent askew,
A crooked trail, as all calves do.

Since then three hundred years have fled,
And, I infer, the calf is dead.

But still he left behind his trail,
And thereby hangs my moral tale.

The trail was taken up next day
By a lone dog that passed that way.

And then a wise bell-wether sheep
Pursued the trail o'er vale and steep.

And drew the flock behind him, too,
As good bell-wethers always do.

And from that day, o'er hill and glade,
Through those old woods a path was made.

And many men wound in and out,
And dodged and turned and bent about,

And uttered words of righteous wrath
Because 'twas such a crooked path;

But still they followed—do not laugh—
The first migrations of that calf.

And through this winding wood-way stalked
Because he wabbled when he walked.

This forest path became a lane,
That bent and turned and turned again;

This crooked lane became a road,
Where many a poor horse, with its load,

Toiled on beneath the burning sun,
And traveled some three miles in one.

And thus a century and a half
They trod the footsteps of that calf.

The years passed on in swiftness fleet,
The road became a village street;

And this, before the men were 'ware,
A city's crowded thoroughfare.

And soon the central street was this
Of a renowned metropolis.

And men two centuries and a half
Trod in the footsteps of that calf,

Each day a hundred thousand rout
Following the zig-zig calf about;

And o'er his crooked journey went
The traffic of a continent.

A hundred thousand men were led
By one calf near three centuries dead.

They followed still his crooked way,
And lost one hundred years a day.

For thus such reverence is lent
To well-established precedent.

A moral lesson this must teach,
Were I ordained and called to preach.

For men are prone to go it blind
Along the calf-paths of the mind,

And work away from sun to sun
To do what other men have done.

They follow in the beaten track,
And out and in and forth and back,

And still their devious course pursue
To keep the path that others do.

But how the wise old wood-gods laugh,
Who saw the first primeval calf.

And many things this tale might teach,
But I am not ordained to preach.

AMONG THE PARAGRAPHERS.

The Recording Angel dropped his pen
And wept with sudden tears.
Said he, "I've recorded the lives of men
For a million million years.
I've never been a stenographer
And always kept the lead.
But now I've a case of writer's cramp,
And I can't keep up the speed."
But he ceased his sighs and wiped his eyes
In a natural elation,
As he thought, while noting eighteen more,
That the fishing season would soon be o'er.
With the city man's vacation.

April, May are most emphatically the months for taking a good blood purifier, because the system is now most in need of such a medicine, and because it more quickly responds to medicinal qualities. In winter impurities do not pass out of the body freely, but accumulate in the blood.

April

The best medicine to purify, enrich and vitalize the blood, and thus give strength and build up the system, is Hood's Sarsaparilla. Thousands take it as their Spring Medicine, and more are taking it today than ever before. If you are tired, "out of

FOUND OUT THE LORD WAS A YANK.

Gov. Matthews is telling a good story he heard in the South recently. In a valley in the northern part of Georgia, between two mountains which shut out all communication with the outside world, there lived an old planter who, while an ardent adherent of the southern cause, was too badly crippled by infirmities to shoulder a musket and march barefooted. But he had a son whom he sent, and after the boy had disappeared down the road the old man waited for the news of the strife. Occasionally rumors of southern victories would float over the mountains, and the old man—Uncle S. he was called—would rejoice and take an unusually large dose of mint julep. At other times, when reverse news came, and it was reported that the gray had been turned back, the old man would bitterly lament, and use the same remedy for grief and sorrow that he used to quiet his joy. Through it all he had abundant faith in the ultimate victory of the confederate army, and any doubt expressed would meet with stern rebuke.

The years wore on and news failed to arrive. The valley was deserted and there was no one to learn the course of events. The old man smoked his pipe and waited impatiently for news. One morning as he sat on the front porch with his pipe, far down the dusty road appeared the form of a solitary pedestrian. Gradually he approached, and the feeble vision of the old planter recognized his long-absent son. The puffs from the pipe came thick and fast, but this was the only sign of eagerness or nervousness displayed. The gate swung open and the soldier walked up and sat down on the steps

"Mornin', Jim," said the old man.
"Mornin', pap," was the quiet response.
"Shot?"
"No'p."
"Sick?"
"No'p."

The old man reached behind him for a stout club which he used for a cane. "Jim," he said nervously, "Jim, ye didn't desart?"

"No. We're whupped."
"What!"
"Yes, we're whupped. Lee has surrendered with his army and we uns all laid down our guns."

The old man jabbed with his cane at a fly for a minute and then, looking up with a troubled expression, asked:—

"Jim, how'd it happen?"

"Well, pap, we uns all fit our best, as long as it was an even shake; but we uns all found out 'at the Lord was a Yank, an' it was no use. We uns laid down our guns an' cum home."—Indianapolis Sentinel.

HE WASN'T CHAMPION.

Jules was the very acceptable courier of a small party of Americans traveling in Europe last summer. He was an accomplished linguist, and, as one of the party said, in the line of profanity, when needed, he was a perfect Napoleon.

"If I could swear in one language as comprehensively as he does in all, I should consider myself a past grand master of cussing," he said.

On the way over the St. Gothard Pass, after leaving Airolo, for some distance the train moved along opposite a tremendously high precipice, over which a tiny stream flowed, almost losing itself in mist before reaching its course below. Jules informed the party as to its peculiarities and retired. Later on a traveler told the Americans a story about certain fish in that stream, to the effect that when they came to the edge of the precipice they curled themselves up, put their tails in their mouths and rolled down like so many hoops.

"Curious, Jules never told us that," said one. "I think I'll speak to him about it." And he did. "Why didn't you let us know about those fish, Jules?" he asked. "Hadn't you heard of the story?"

"Yes, I had," said Jules, "but I didn't neffer tell at story to ze Americans, zey can tell pooty good lies deirselves."—Harper's Drawer.

STORIES BY AN OLD TRAPPER.

"A person who has tramped about in the woods for 30 years as I have done," said George Washington Bear of Nebo in the Juniata valley, "may learn a great many curious things if he keeps his eyes open, and has head enough to remember 'em all. I have hunted and trapped almost the entire length of the Blue mountain ridge ever since I was a boy, and I have learned a great many things that some folks don't know. And I haven't found all the curious things in the woods, either. The fields and the swamps show up their share.

"Now, whoever read in any book that the mink, which is popularly supposed to be an animal that gets its living entirely from the water, will sit all night, if necessary, in the nest of a rabbit, waiting to rob the unsuspecting bunny when he comes hopping home? And the nest of the rabbit may be miles from any stream at that. I know the minks will do this, for I have shot scores of them as they crouched beneath a bush or a high tuft of weeds where some rabbit had its cozy form. The skunk will do the same thing, and so will the weasel. By the way, I wonder if any veterinary surgeon ever knew that the inner skin of a mink, dried and ground into powder, is the best thing in the world for foundered horses? I never heard of one who did.

"I have learned by observation that owls never build nests. They lay two big eggs, and will deposit them in a squirrel's nest, hawk's nest, or any other similar receptacle, but they don't make nests of their own. The owl bolts its food, fur, feathers and all, and then sits on a limb while digestion proceeds. The feathers or fur and bones of what the owl has partaken are by some process separated from the nutritive parts, and formed into a ball, which the owl ejects from its mouth. The hawk, on the other hand, is nice about its meal. It will pluck the chicken or bird, or skin its rabbit before eating it and remove the bones with surgical nicety.

"I once found a curious nest on Pisgah hill. There were 10 eggs in it of different sizes, some of them very large ones. I took them all home and put them under a hen. All but two of them hatched, but after different periods of incumbation. The result was a screech owl, four pheasants, two wild turkeys and a wood duck, and I raised them all. The spoiled eggs, I think, were a night hawk's and a crane's. I found out afterward that what I thought was a nest was not a nest at all, but a place where an egg collector of the locality had deposited some of his spoils one day while he went in search of more.

"Wherever there are many red squirrels, gray and black squirrels will be scarce. The little red squirrel is the implacable enemy of both the other kinds. There are no black squirrels in the Blue mountains There is a species of half black and half gray that I never heard of anywhere else. I once shot a curiosity in the way of a squirrel. Half of it was a bright red and the other half pure white. It had black eyes.

"The woodpecker can climb up the stem of a tree like a flash, but he can't climb down it to save his life. The little sapsucker, of the same family, can do both. The kingfisher dives under the water and catches its fish in its mouth. The crane stands in the water and fishes and spears its pray with its long sharp bill, as you might spear an eel with a gig. The crane rises with the fish impaled on its bill and flies away home. I shot a six-foot crane once on the wing that had a two-pound trout impaled that way. The fish-hawk drops into the water like a plummet and seizes its fish in its talons.

"Bear's grease has, for time out of mind, been considered the best of all bases for hair oil. That may be, if only a hair dressing is wanted. Bear's grease has no medicinal qualities. On the contrary, coon's oil not only makes the best of hair dressing, but the person who uses it will never be troubled with dandruff or baldness. It may be known, but I doubt it, that the coon, no matter how near starvation he may be, will not eat the choicest morsel if he can't get to water and wash it first. The coon bears its young every two years, and the mother coon keeps one family of young about her to the very day she brings forth another. When the female coon is with young she leaves no scent that a dog can follow.

A skunk is by general acceptance in this country believed to be the polecat, and in some localities it is known by no other name. The fact is, the skunk is no more a polecat than the bear is a fox. There is no such a thing in the United States as a polecat, which is a true weasel, common in England and other European countries. The oil that can be fried from skunks' fat is an incomparable remedy for croup, sore throat, asthma and kindred diseases, and I have sold in my time the oil of 3000 skunks at $1 an ounce. It is the most penetrating ointment I know of, and everybody in the Juniata valley knows its value.

"A few years ago the clearings along the Blue mountain were terrorized by some unknown animal. It was never seen, but its cries were the most frightful that could be imagined. I had never heard anything like it, and I used all my skill for months to trap or kill it, but without success. One night while I was coon hunting the unknown animal's awful cry arose from a clump of bushes only a few feet from where I was standing. I could see nothing, but fired both barrels into the bushes. There was a great thrashing about for a few seconds and all was quiet. I went to the spot and found the animal dead. I carried it home and found that it was nothing but a common red fox. It had been shot or hurt in some way in the throat, and its vocal cords injured so that when the poor beast attempted to bark the terrible cries that had made it such a terror came forth instead.

"A rattlesnake, or any other venomous snake, will go a mile out of its way, if it is necessary, to avoid a non-venomous one, even if the latter is only a garter snake. Venomous snakes don't fear each other, and never fight among themselves, but they're mortally afraid of the other kind. A blacksnake will whip and kill a rattlesnake in a very short time. A rattlesnake doesn't spring his rattle to warn folks of his presence, only when he is taking his ease and doesn't want to be disturbed. The rattler is lazy and hates to move after he has settled down for a bask in the sun, and he turns on his rattle hoping that it will keep intruders away and save him the trouble of changing his position. When the rattler wants to bite something he doesn't betray his presence by rattling. He knows better than to do that."—New York Sun.

The Discovery Saved His Life.

Mr. G. Cailloutte, druggist, Beaversville, Ill., says: "To Dr. King's New Discovery I owe my life. Was taken with la grippe and tried physicians for miles about, but of no avail, and was given up and told I could not live. Having Dr. King's New Discovery in my store I sent for a bottle and began its use, and from the first dose began to get better, and after using three bottles was up and about again. It is worth its weight in gold. We won't keep store or house without it." Get a free trial of LeGro & Lynde, Palmer; G. L. Keeney, Monson; F. A. Spencer, Ware.

STOP THE LEAKS WITH PAPER.

Paper pulp is one of the most useful articles in the reach of mankind. Mixed with glue and plaster of Paris or Portland cement, it is the best thing to stop cracks and breaks in wood. Pulp paper and plaster alone should be kept within the reach of every housekeeper. The pulp must be kept in a close-stoppered bottle, in order that the moisture may not evaporate. When required for use, make it of the consistency of thin gruel with hot water, add plaster of Paris to make it pasty, and use it at once. For leakage around pipes, to stop the overflow of water in stationary washstands, where the bowl and the upper slab join, it is invaluable. Used with care, it will stop leaks in iron pipes, provided the water can be shut off long enough to allow it to set.

Around the empty pipe wrap a single thickness or two of cheesecloth, just wide enough to cover the break, then apply the compound, pressing it in place and making an oval of it somewhat after the fashion of lead pipe joining, only larger. The strength of this paste, when once it is thoroughly hardened, is almost beyond belief. The bit of cheesecloth prevents the clogging of the pipe by the paste working through the cracks. An iron pipe that supplies the household with water had a piece broken out by freezing. The piece was put in place, bound by a strap of muslin, then thoroughly packed with paper pulp and Portland cement, and was to all appearances as good as new. Paper pulp and fine sawdust boiled together for hours, and mixed with glue dissolved in linseed oil, makes a perfect filling for cracks in floors. It may be put on and left until partly dry, then covered with paraffine and smoothed with a hot iron.

Dangerous Drugs.

Avoid the use of white or pink headache powders, they contain dangerous drugs Taylor's Anti-Headache Powders are brown; they look like ground coffee and they have a delightful aromatic taste. Try them once and you will never be without them. Get them of LeGro & Lynde.

Colds are serious things. They lead to worse things. A cold is the seed of consumption. Croup is a cold's half-brother—it is generally caused by cold, and many a little life has been snuffed out by it because the proper remedy was not at hand.

BOSS BAKING POWDER:-

YALE MEDICAL SCHOOL, New Haven, Conn. December 20, 1895.

C. D. BOSS & SON, New London Conn.

GENTLEMEN:—I have examined the package of Boss Baking Powder which you sent to me for that purpose. I find that it is composed of the ingredients which in my opinion are most suitable for such a preparation. The ingredients are combined in the proper proportion for the best result, and the mixture shows no adulteration or injurious constituents.

Yours truly,

Herbert E. Smith

After Many Days.

I sit beside my flying loom,
I toss the shuttle to and fro;
The sunlight floods the quiet room,
Making the pattern gleam and glow.
Without, autumnal glories shine;
Through warp and woof rich shadows play;—
Would God it were more fair and fine,
This web that groweth day by day!

I weave and weave till day is done;
But who will bleach the linen white,
By alchemy of rain and sun,
Hot summer noons, and dewy night?
And who its shining length will wear?
Under its folds what heart will hide
Its stress of passion, or of prayer,
Of worldless bliss, or love denied?

I plant a tree beside my gate;
Slowly it rises, fair and tall;
With prophecy of royal state
It towers above the old gray wall!
But who will see it in its prime?
What lover seek its leafy ways?
What bard unborn, with song and rhyme,
Wed its green boughs to deathless lays?

I build a mansion wide and fair;
I rear its towers of fretted stone;
But who shall breathe its happy air?
Who call its sheltering roof its own?
What guests shall throng its chambers fine
What feet youth's joyous measures tread
When I have drained life's last red wine,
And grass grows green above my head?

On the soft air I lose a song;
From pole to pole it drifteth far;
It floateth fast, it floateth long,
Inconsequent as breezes are!
But who will hear it as it flies
Through shadowy spaces, vast and dim,
And lure it from the lonely skies,
When I have done with song and hymn?

PALMER HISTORY GLEANINGS.

BY O. P. ALLEN.

Stories of the Taverns Retold.

In the olden days when travelers were few, the curtains of the hospitable tent were raised at the approach of the stranger, who was made welcome without fee or reward; then, as the wanderers from home increased, the oriental Khan was supplied to meet the needs of those who carried their provisions with them, but the tavern or hotel was the outcome of a higher civilization. In the genesis and development of all our New England towns, the tavern was one of the earliest institutions to be established to meet the wants of the people.

Our town was no exception to the rule. As early as 1733 Duncan Quinton opened a house of entertainment at the Old Centre on the site now occupied by the Frink Tavern. We have no description of this house, but we can well imagine it was of limited proportions, suited to the requirements of the times, the humble beginning of the famous hostelries of Palmer. Thomas Quinton succeeded his father about the time of the Revolution, and conducted the house until 1793, when he sold out to William King from Monson. About two years later, Mr. King tore down the old house, which had become sadly out of repair, and erected on the same site the since famous house known as the Frink Tavern, now owned and occupied as a private residence by Alfred Trumble. Landlord John King received the tavern from his father in 1801, and kept it till 1817, when it passed into the possession of John Frink, under whose fostering care it reached the height of its fame and prosperity. All the stages on this route from Boston to New York stopped at his door, where horses were exchanged and baggage examined. His rooms were crowded with guests, so that he was obliged to add an ell to the rear and a wing to each side of the house in order to accommodate his increasing patronage. It was here that Major Morgan first gained notice by his appointment as the express agent of the stage line. In due time he captured Maria, one of the fair daughters of Mr. Frink, and for many years continued an important factor in town affairs. Mr. Frink conducted the tavern till 1832, when he retired to a farm some two miles east from the Center on the Warren road, where he spent the remainder of his life. Abner Allen succeeded for the next ten years; about 1839 the stages were withdrawn because of the opening of the railroad from Boston to Springfield. Col. Elias Turner took the house in 1842, but the palmy days of the Old Centre were gone, and he found little profit in the tavern business, so in 1862 he sold his interest to Steven Newton and John Converse, who in turn sold to Alfred Trumble in 1867, by whom the place is still occupied. The house has been divested of its large ell and two wings, otherwise it remains as it was constructed one hundred years ago. Long may it remain a memorial of the time when the Old Center was the only mart of the town.

The Thompson Tavern.

John Thompson opened a tavern at the Old Center about 1737, and it soon became a popular resort. It stood between the house where St. John now lives and the house occupied by Daniel Mahoney. It was a one-story, somewhat rangey house, and better adapted than neighbor Quinton's for catering to the public taste of those times, so it soon became the popular resort for those who desired a mug of hot toddy in winter or "black strap" in summer. Even the town meetings used often to adjourn for fifteen minutes to get refreshments at Thompson's, so the old records relate. Thompson gave the tavern into the care of his son John on the opening of the Revolution, and became the captain of a company; he went through the war and died in 1785. John, Jr, sold the property in 1793 and the family went West, and the old tavern was soon dismantled.

The Ward Tavern.

Stimulated by the revival of prosperity caused by the advent of the new stage route through the Old Centre, Asa Ward built a large two-story house, similar in style to the Frink Tavern, on the site now occupied by Samuel Brown, and opened a rival house there about 1800. It never achieved the popularity of the house across the street, though it had a fair patronage. It came into the possession of Rufus Fuller in the early forties, and was burned May 20, 1848, while the family was away. Mr. Fuller then bought the old town house, which had been the gift of Aaron Merrick, moved it to the former site of the tavern and converted it into a dwelling house with additions, not for a tavern, but for his own convenience.

The Benjamin Thompson Tavern.

In early times the only road north from Palmer lead from the Old Center by the present Whipple Crossing, up the hill past the Hastings farm some distance, then north, crossing the old Indian trail from Brookfield to Hadley, to Ware and Enfield. At the time in question it was a much-traveled road. Benjamin Thompson located in this northwest section of the town about 1764, beginning probably with a log house. Subsequently he erected a two-story framed house and opened a tavern, which he continued until about 1793, when he sold out to Mr. Davis and went West. The old tavern house was burned about 15 years ago; of late years the place has been known as the Dan Dewire farm. This Benjamin Thompson was the son of Captain John Thompson, and will be remembered as the hero of a former paper, in which he was ushered into the cellar by the unpolite bell wether of the flock.

David Shaw Tavern.

Dea. David Shaw opened a house for the entertainment of the public about 1740 on the farm lately owned by L. E. Moore, which he is said to have kept for some ten years. He was an innholder there, certainly in 1748, as we find him alluded to in that capacity during the above year in the probate records at Northampton, book 7, page 207. No one seems to know what became of the house, but as it was built very early it was probably replaced before the Revolution by the two-story house still remaining near the new house built by Mr. Moore

The King Tavern.

John King, Jr., built a tavern on King's Row, where the Cross block now stands, about 1750; it was burned in 1764. The records say, "The neighbors all turned out, cut the timber and hauled it to the spot, and in a week's time had up the frame of a new two-story house." This house was two stories in front, running down to one story in the rear, as was the style in those days. There were two large front rooms both below and above, with two smaller ones in the rear of each for bedrooms, a huge stone chimney claimed the center of the house by exclusive right, with fireplaces for each of the four rooms. The fireplace for the kitchen in the rear was ten feet wide, and took a large log and any amount of smaller sticks to keep the room warm in winter. Here John King, Jr, lived and kept tavern till his death in 1778; he was succeeded by his son John, who in turn was followed by John Shaw, who married his daughter Margaret in 1791. John Shaw kept tavern there many years. There flourished an elm tree in front of the house, in whose cozy branches an owl took up its abode, which meant a great depletion in John Shaw's stock of fowls, so one afternoon he took an old flint-lock gun which lacked a flint, and when he had taken sure aim Mrs. Shaw touched it off with a live coal from the fireplace, the result being a defunct owl. The great elm tree was struck by lightning and had to be cut down, much to the grief of the owner. When Col. Knox married the daughter of John Shaw he came to live in the old historical tavern, and there David and King Knox were born. For nearly ninety years this was the only tavern kept within the precinct of the present village of Palmer. In its last days it was rented as a tenement house, and was sold in 1838 to Amos Billings, who took it down. It was then in a good state of preservation, and with little care might have been kept a century longer.

Captain Walker's Tavern.

The farm on which this house stands was purchased by Samuel Frost in 1728. The old front part of the present house was probably built by him about 1760, or possibly sooner. Capt. Jesse King, who was born in 1759, used to say the house was there before his remembrance. Frost sold the place in 1763 to Jonathan Chapin, who lived on the M. C. Fenton farm, by whom it was owned many years. The farm was not owned by Capt. Walker, as it appears from the records at Springfield, but it seems he occupied it and kept a tavern there for some years prior to 1776, when he bought another farm in Palmer of Seth Adams. He was succeeded as a tenant by a Mr. Bliss. As innkeeper during his occupancy he probably entertained some of the officers of Burgoyne's army during its encampment in front of his house one night in 1777. The remains of the old barroom may still be seen in the front room. A somewhat amusing circumstance was related to the writer by Mr. Loami Blodgett of West Brimfield, now 90 years of age, who said a party of young men came to the house of Mr. Bliss one night to enjoy a frolic, for which purpose they hired the use of an upper room; becoming somewhat boisterous, Bliss went up to quiet them, in return for which they subjected him to a course of pranks never found in the ritual of any order before or since; more dead than alive he found himself at the foot of the stairs at last, when his wife met him with the question, "Bliss, are your brains knocked out?" "No," said he, "for if I had had any I never would have gone up there." It is probable that Bliss remained till 1781, when Timothy Brainerd became a tenant of the place. He had served three years in the war in a Connecticut regiment, and having learned the trade of a blacksmith set up his business in Palmer, making scythes and all manner of articles then found in the country hardware store. He was married in 1783, and brought his fair bride from Boston on horseback. They brought along with them a good-sized looking glass and a set of wine glasses, which are still in the possession of the family. The farm in the meantime had passed from Chapin to Isaac Bissell, from him to Thomas Dwight in 1786, and of him Timothy Brainerd bought it in 1788. On the death of Timothy Brainerd the farm passed into the possession of his son, Deacon Wilson, and stills remains in the family. In 1842 the low rear part of the house was raised a story to have it conform to the front portion, but much of the house remains as constructed one hundred and thirty-five years ago.

The Shaw Tavern.

The farm on which this house stands was owned as early as 1733 by William Patterson, and he probably settled there at an earlier date. There is good reason to think he built the older portion of the present house as early as 1745, as the boards and timbers bear marks of great age. The original house was two stories in front and one story in the rear, according to the fashion of a century and a half ago. Joshua McMaster bought the farm in 1759 and owned it till 1809. It is said that he kept tavern there during the Revolution, and onward. Reuben Shaw bought the place in 1809 and made quite an addition to the house the next year, and continued to conduct the business of tavern keeping till 1835. He died in 1859, and the property fell to his son Samuel, and in turn went to his son Charles Shaw, the present owner. This house bears an ancient appearance, but the frame is well preserved and is likely to endure for many years. The older part is probably the most ancient building now standing in Palmer. The Shaw farm is of historic interest. In ancient times the Indians doubtless had a village here, as is evidenced by the many arrow heads and other aboriginal relics found. Some time ago Mr. Shaw found a real specimen of what seems to have been a breastplate, wrought out of a flat stone 6 by 12 inches, perforated so that it could be suspended from the neck. A portion of Burgoyne's men encamped not far from here in 1777, during their memorable march as prisoners to Boston. Gen. Hull encamped just north of this house in 1812 with 1000 men while on his march to Canada. It was also near here that the famous Kidd letter was found in 1849, which caused such a sensation at the time.

The First Scott Tavern.

There seems to have been two Scott taverns in town. The first one was opened by Lieut. William Scott, probably before 1740, in proof of which I give the following extract from the diary of Richard Hazen, who was appointed in 1740 by Gov. Belcher to survey the boundary line between Massachusetts and New Hampshire. On his return from Albany he says: "Thursday, April 21, 1740—We traveled from thence to Springfield, which makes 100 miles from Albany, and the same night came to Scott's in Kingston and lodged there. Wednesday, April 22—We traveled from Scott's through Brookfield and from thence to Leicester and lodged at Sargent's tavern by his fireside." The reader probably understands that Palmer was then called Kingston. This tavern was located just east of the bridge near the present wire mill. This remained as a public house till the Revolution. It was a one and a half story building, which was taken down about 1825 by Alauson Merrick, who erected the house which still remains on the same site.

Second Scott Tavern.

At the time of the marriage of William Scott, 3d, his father built for him the finest house then in Palmer, on the site of the present Andrew Holt house. It was a large, roomy, two-story building with a gambrel roof, and was opened as a public house in 1774. Both the elder and younger Scott were grand Masons, so they had a hall in the third story where members of the order often met to practice the rites, though not as an organized lodge. William Scott, 3d, like his father, was a justice of the peace, and as such held court at his house; he was also called to go abroad much of the time. He was a man of liberal education, a professional lawyer and of more than average ability. Many noted people sought entertainment at this house. Everett, in his "Mount Vernon Papers," says: "Washington left New York October 17, 1789, in a chariot drawn by four horses, accompanied by several of his state officers and his own servants. He left Springfield Thursday morning, 22, at 7 o'clock, and arrived at Palmer, stopping at the old Scott tavern, where he breakfasted." As a memorial of this noted event the table linen used at that meal was preserved for many years in the Scott family. The passing of Washington through Palmer made a profound impression, which lingered long in the memory of the people. As Mr. Scott's time was largely taken up by public business, the care of running the tavern and farm was left to his wife, a woman of remarkable ability. She died in 1792. Mr. Scott married again the same year, and was persuaded by his wife to mortgage his property in Palmer and remove to Troy, N. Y., where he opened another public house. He died in 1795. Soon after the Palmer tavern came under the direction of Asa Bates, who ran the house till about 1813, and gave it his own name meantime. About 1814, John Sedgwick having married Asenath, daughter of the late William Scott, succeeded in recovering the tavern which was held by Capt. Southgate of Leicester, and reopened the house under his own name, which he continued until 1830, when the old house becoming sadly out of repair it was abandoned and taken down. While occupying the old Scott house Mr. Sedgwick received the appointment of sheriff, connected with the duties of which a circumstance occurred which gave him no little local fame. On the 14th of August, 1821, a stranger on horseback called for refreshments at the Sedgwick house, and after resting for a brief time went on his way to Springfield. There was something in the stranger's appearance which aroused Sedgwick's suspicion, so that when the next stage came, announcing that Lightfoot, alias Michael Martin, had robbed Major Bray on the highway in Medford and later had taken a horse in Holliston, Sedgwick posted at once to Springfield, where he found his man retired for the night at the hotel there. He entered the room and secured his prisoner before he was aware of danger, although the latter's pistols were on the table near his bedside. He returned with him to Palmer, where a great crowd awaited his arrival. Much had been said about the fleetness of Lightfoot, and as Sedgwick also boasted of his own swiftness as a runner, he made a bet with Lightfoot that he could outrun him, which wager was quickly accepted. They started down the road, when in less time than it takes to write these words Lightfoot was far ahead, when it suddenly dawned on Sedgwick's mind that he might thus foolishly lose his prisoner; so he called out to Lightfoot to come back and he would pay the wager. He came back, was surrounded, and Sedgwick took the precaution to secure him with strong cords. Lightfoot did not relish this and told Sedgwick he would appear to him sometime when he would little care to see him. Sedgwick conducted him safely to Boston, but it is said he did not feel secure till he knew that Lightfoot had paid the penalty of his many misdeeds with his life.

The Sedgwick Tavern.

The old Scott tavern having became unsuitable for public use, Mr. Sedgwick built a new tavern where Mr. Snow now lives, in 1829; it was a good-sized, two-story building, and was opened in 1830. It soon became one of the most popular hostelries on the old stage route. Both Mr. Sedgwick and wife knew how to cater for the public, so that people would often ride many miles to stop over night where a good table and kind attendance always awaited them. With the exception of the years 1834-5, when the tavern was rented to John Baldwin, the house was conducted by Mr. Sedgwick till his death in 1840, when for several years it was under the charge of Hiram Converse, who went there to settle the estate. He sold the tavern to Elisha Converse in 1844, who moved it as far as the Point of Rocks late in the season, where it remained until the following spring and was occupied by John Bolles. The following season it was moved to the site now occupied by Goodes' store, where it was occupied by Elisha Converse as a tenement until it was destroyed by the disastrous fire of 1851.

The Graves Tavern.

Daniel Graves opened a public house on the Wilbraham road, on the present farm of Rev. Mr. Graham, as early as 1760, and after his death it was continued under the charge of his son, Major Aaron, who died in 1890. The house was a large two-story building with a gambrel roof and a wing extending on the east end, substantially built in the colonial style. A large door set in the center of the front of the house opened into an ample hall, flanked on either side by large rooms, and led into a generous dining room and kitchen in the rear. There were ample rooms above for the accommodation of guests. The house stood opposite the present historic elm under which it is claimed Washington stopped and addressed the people while on his way to take command of the Continental army at Cambridge in July, 1775. Major Aaron Graves served through the war and came back to spend the remainder of his days at the old tavern homestead. This was continued as a public house till about 1830, with A. W. Bugby as its last landlord. After Mr. Webber bought the farm he built the present brick house. The old historic tavern, which had become much out of repair, was taken down about 1845, and a portion of the timber was used in building the house long occupied by Mr. Crosby. The huge lock and key which served so long to secure the front door is in the possession of the writer, and is cherished as a memento of the fading past of our colonial taverns.

A LADIES' LUNCHEON.

The setting of the luncheon table is as dainty and perfect in linen and appointments as the means of the household will allow. Here is an opportunity for a lady to show all her pretty table things to a most appreciative audience, who will be much more observant of her fine linen, rare china, and odd pieces of silver and glass than guests of the other sex. Here also can be displayed the many charming lunch contrivances which have no place at a dinner—odd bouillon cups and spoons, delicate chocolate cups and saucers, embroidered luncheon cloth and napkins, and at an informal entertainment small bread-plates and silver butter-knives, which are at each person's left. At a very informal lunch, also, a bare table is sometimes used, which can be made lovely with the center square or long piece of lace or embroidery, and the various little silver and glass dishes which are on the table reflected in the highly polished surface. The hostess here pours tea from the head of the table, and the pretty odd china teacups are passed to each person on a salver with sugar and cream in appropriate little silver bowl and pitcher.

At this luncheon the embroidered or damask cloth is laid over the Canton flannel, with the lace or embroidered center piece on top. The flowers are in a bowl or vase in the middle and in small vases placed about the table. The candles are in candelabra or single sticks, and the little fancy dishes of bon-bons, cake, etc., decorate the table as at a dinner, the same prevailing color being seen in everything, from the flowers in the center to the little shades on the candles and the icing on the cakes. The places are set as for a dinner—three forks and oyster-fork on the left, and the knives and the glasses at the right, and the plate with its plainly folded napkin holding a roll. The salt and pepper casters are between every two places, and a card with the name of each guest at the place she is to occupy. Favors can also be at each place if they are given. For these the usual thing is a bon-bonniere, some appropriate article in silver, or a bunch of flowers.

For the menu the following list of courses in their order can be elaborated or simplified to meet any requirements:

First, oysters or clams on the half shell, or fruit. In winter grape fruit is frequently used, cut in half with the bitter core removed, sweetened and flavored with rum or cordial, and a half given to each person on a plate with an orange spoon. Then bouillon, consomme, or clam broth in bouillon cups. Next fish, usually a made dish, as lobster chops with sauce tartare, creamed fish in individual dishes, or any fish prepared with a sauce. Then the entree comes—sweetbreads, croquettes, mushrooms, timbales, eggs prepared as a fancy omelette or in any appropriate manner. After one or two of these courses, comes the substantial course, which takes the place of the roast at dinner, but is never a roast at luncheon. Any delicate meat, chicken or chops, prepared with sauce or in a fancy style, will answer. With this potatoes in some form, and chocolate in small cups with whipped cream, are passed. A vegetable served alone comes now—asparagus, artichokes, etc. Then Roman punch in individual frozen forms or glasses. Then game with salad or salad alone with toasted crackers and a delicate cheese. The table is then cleared, and the ices with cake are served. Then fruit, bonbons, etc., and last of all coffee, which at a luncheon is usually passed at the table.—Harper's Bazar.

TOMMY'S PROOF OF DEVOTION.

"Tommy was a disreputable little fellow when he first made his appearance at the mission," said an East-side worker. "He is not a thing of beauty to-day, but there is a decided change in his favor since he gave up his street companions. He is perfectly devoted to us and shows his appreciation of the only kindness he has ever known by wishing to 'do things' for us continually. He sweeps the street and goes on errands for us occasionally, and to show how thoroughly in earnest he is to help us and to save a cent for us if he can, let me tell you a story.

"Tommy came to the mission the other day, after his work was done, to see if we wanted anything done. It was one of the warmest days we have had, and Tommy looked exceedingly warm and not over-clean.

"'Yes, Tommy,' I said to him. 'Here's a letter for our pastor which I want mailed at once, and here is a dime, for which buy a special delivery stamp and put it on the letter.'

"Tommy said he knew what to do, and hurried away. Hours later he returned, much warmer than when he left the place, less clean by several degrees, and all in all he was a dissolving view in neutral tints. In his left hand he held the dime which I had given him, and between finger and thumb in his right hand he held what seemed a patch of discolored pulp.

"'Here Miss,' he said, extending his left hand, 'is the ten cents. I didn't have nothin' to do, so I just carried the letter there, and here,' advancing the pulp-like bit which he held in his right hand, 'is the stamp that was on the letter. I licked it off.'

"There may be better, grander and more esthetic ways of showing devotion to a cause," said the story-teller, "but there certainly could be nothing more expressive of sincerity than Tommy with his licked-off stamp."—New York Tribune.

The Journal.

FRIDAY EVENING, MARCH 6, 1896.

AN ANSWER

To Rev. Mr. Jenkins's Appeal to Catholics.

Editor of Journal: — Allow me through your columns in behalf of the Catholic people of Palmer, to thank Rev. Frank E. Jenkins for the manly, earnest letter in last week's JOURNAL. At a time when so many Protestant ministers are pursuing a policy of masterly inactivity with regard to that noxious thing that has recently inflicted itself upon this community, it is refreshing to find even one minister following in the footsteps of Rev. Washington Gladden, the eminent Congregationalist, and boldly disavowing all sympathy with religious bigots.

Mr. Jenkins tells us he took counsel with no one, and it would be well for his clerical confreres if they would imitate him in this; if they too would dare to speak out their own honest convictions, and allow more frequently the intelligence of the pulpit to make itself manifest uninfluenced by the prejudice of the pews.

While I can heartily and sincerely say 'Amen' to most of the statements contained in that excellent letter, there are one or two to which I must take exception. For instance, the writer says, "The outcome, for the saloons or against them, will be credited to you", meaning that in the event of the town voting license, the Catholics will be held responsible. This is hardly fair. If the Protestant voters of this town expressed their preference for no-license, no-license would be won even if all the Catholic voters favored license. Why then should we alone be held responsible? Again, in the statement I have quoted, there is an unintentional confusion of terms. It does not necessarily follow because a citizen votes for license that he favors the saloon. I have watched with considerable interest the annual contest between the advocates of license and no-license, and I must confess that hitherto I have not sympathized with the manner in which the no-license campaign has been conducted. To denounce indiscriminately the voters for license as "rummies," "bummers," and "unfit to hold town office," was not in my opinion the best way to attain success. Vituperation and abuse is no argument. This year I am glad to see an apparent change of methods, but there still remains the same old statement to which our Prohibitionist friends cling as to an article of faith—A man who votes for license, votes for the saloon. It is not true. I do not believe that the 340 citizens of Palmer who voted last year for license did so because they wished the saloons to flourish. The regulation of the liquor traffic is a question for the political economist and not for the theologian. It is a question of methods and not of morals, and I feel convinced that a majority of the license voters last year so considered it. The problem that must be solved each year by the citizens of this town is simply this:—How can the evil that comes from the abuse of intoxicating drink be best minimized? Or in other words, which method of disposing of the liquor question best results for the good of the community, license or no-license? In the light of past experience the license man is convinced that a no-license regime is a year of fraud, hypocrisy and free rum. His own observation has shown him that in those years when Palmer voted no-license, little or no attempt was made to carry out the will of the people; drunkenness instead of being diminished, increased, and the honest license voter declares he will have no more of it, and he votes for license, not because he favors saloons or drunkenness, but because he believes under license less harm will result. Of two evils he thinks he has chosen the lesser. Is he right in his conclusions? Because little or no attempt was made to carry out the no-license policy and failure resulted, ought that policy to be held responsible? Is not the honest license voter condemning a policy before really giving it a trial? He says it has not succeeded and will not, and at the same time admits it has never been fairly tested. Surely, men and brethren, this is not acting over intelligently.

The second statement of my friend which I cannot allow to pass unchallenged, is this: "If it should become evident that the town is kept in the grip of the saloons by the power of the Catholic church, the A. P. A. will have an argument, etc." Now I am afraid Mr. Jenkins is having a little quiet fun with our intolerant friends. What would the A. P. A. do with an argument? Would they recognize one even if they saw it? No, I am under no fear of the members of that un-American organization resorting to argument. What the A. P. A. does or fails to do, gives me little concern, but I do confess to considerable surprise that any intelligent man should refer to the Catholic church and its attitude toward the saloons as Mr. Jenkins does in the words quoted. If he will read again what he so flatteringly calls the "eloquent words of Father Hart," which appeared in your columns a year ago, he will find how the church regards saloons. I will only repeat this extract from the decrees of the Baltimore Council—"Finally we admonish all Catholics who are engaged in the liquor traffic to consider by how many and how great dangers it is surrounded" and urges them "to select a more honorable way of making a living." As I have said before, this is not a religious question, not even a question directly entering the domain of morals, but a business question, a question of methods.

Mr. Jenkins alludes to my position and says "I am informed that he (Father Hart) stands just where he did last year at this time." He was correctly informed I am decidedly averse to appearing in print; it is against both my custom and my inclination, but when a question of public moment arises and the expression of my views is deemed advisable, I am perfectly willing to give them. I am not a Prohibitionist. I believe the principal of prohibition to be absolutely indefensible, inasmuch as it would prevent the proper use of anything. Because I am a total abstainer and my neighbor uses (uses, you understand, not abuses) liquor, I fail to see that I have any greater right to say to him, you must not drink, than he has to say to me, you must drink. But our Prohibitional friends will say, "Must we sit quiet and see the demon of rum, etc?" No. Society has a right to protect itself. When it sees that the evil resulting from the abuse of liquor is a menace to the community, it has a perfect right to make the necessary regulations for self-protection, and the right of the few must give way for the benefit of the many. I want to see drunkenness repressed—the evil of intemperance lessened. Will no-license do it? I do not know. I do not believe it has ever been given a trial. A number of reputable citizens declare this year, as they declared last, that if the town votes no-license, they will see that the law is enforced. Although I fear they do not fully realize what they engage to do, I have such confidence in their honor, however, that I would be glad to have the experiment tried. If after a year we see that under the best conditions no-license is a failure—that there is no decrease of drunkenness, that all honest men must admit that prohibition in this town does not and cannot prohibit,—then I will confess my disbelief in its efficacy and seek for another remedy. I too join with Mr. Jenkins in appealing this year for no-license. I appeal not to the Catholics nor to the Protestants, not as a Catholic priest to his people, but as an American citizen, to all good citizens interested in the welfare of the town to vote no-license. I have not attempted to arouse any mawkish sentiment, I have not addressed my remarks to the feelings, but I appeal to the reason, and may the result of this appeal show itself in a no-license victory. Respectfully,

WILLIAM H. HART.

No Combination.

Editor of the Journal:—The Republican of to-day says that the ticket nominated last evening at the Republican caucus "is said to have been a combination of the A. P. A. and the Prohibition party." I hereby state positively that there was no combination of the Prohibition party, or of the No-License League, or of any other no-license or temperance body with any other body or individuals, directly or indirectly. Everybody in Palmer knows that I know what I am talking about in this matter. Personally I like the ticket nominated, and expect to vote it entire. It includes both Catholic and Protestants, and I like that. I shall vote it because I like it, but the statement made in the Republican is utterly false.

Yours Sincerely,

FRANK E. JENKINS.

Palmer, Mass., March 5, 1896.

GOVERNOR Frederick T. Greenhalge died at his home in Lowell at 12:30 yesterday morning. While it had been known for several days that the governor was dangerously ill and that his recovery was doubtful, the announcement of the end came with an unexpected suddenness and cast a gloom over every city and hamlet in the commonwealth. Governor Greenhalge is mournrd as few men are, and all Massachusetts will regret his death in the prime of life. He proved himself very much more of a governor than even his most intimate friends ever dared hope for him; thoughtful, conscientious, and unwavering from the line of the best interests of the commonwealth as he saw them, he stood out from the influences which surround many public men and acted for himself, wisely, gaining thereby the highest encomiums of praise. His death is due to overwork on the stump during the campaign of last fall, and a too generous yielding to the multitude of requests for his presence at various social functions throughout the state. His last work at the state house was February 7th.

The delegates elected to the state convention were H. G. Loomis, H. E. W. Clark, R. L. Bond and R. C. Newell; to the district convention H. N. Sedgwick, M. M. Thomas, J. C. Green and W. E. McDonald, there being no other ticket in the field.

The caucus called out the largest attendance of any ever held in the town, although there were many of the other party present out of curiosity. The town committee had prepared a blank ballot, but two printed ballots were in the field, and easily obtained the favor of the voters; 158 ballots were cast.

Considerable feeling is manifested regarding the outcome of the "snap" caucus, as it is called by many, especially in regard to the nominations for selectmen, and the result is looked upon as brought about by a combination between voters who had some grievence against the present board, and the A. P. A. membeas of this organization scoured the town all day Wednesday urging doubtful ones to attend the caucus and vote for selectmen; when asked what the ticket was to be the reply was, "You'll find out when you get there," and but little could be learned. The printed ticket was a complete surprise to the greater portion of the voters, and with the inconvenient facilities existing for marking the ballots it is not surprising that many used those rather than take the trouble of preparing one. It is certain, from expressions heard about town, that many who voted the ticket at the caucus will not support it at the polls. There is no criticism as to the fitness of the candidates, the objection being to having a ballot prepared by a few sprung on the caucus.

A Blazing Lamp and a Plucky Young Man.

Albert Shaw, a member of the junior class of the high school, was severely burned on both hands Tuesday evening at his home on West Main street while throwing a kerosene lamp which had caught fire out of the house. He was in the sitting room alone, and in attempting to extinguish a piano lamp the fount fell from its support to the floor. The oil ran out and caught fire, and the large paper shade blazed up fiercely. He quickly threw the shade into the fireplace, and by this time the oil from the lamp was flaming up alarmingly. He seized the lamp in his hands, and as there was no door opening outside from this room, started for the dining room; his mother reached the outside door about the same time, but it was locked and bolted, and of course there was a little delay in getting it open. Meanwhile Albert pluckily held the burning lamp in his hands, the oil running over his fingers and blazing up. After what seemed an age to both, but in reality was only a few seconds, the door was opened and the lamp thrown out. The young man's hands were then found to be badly burned and blistered, especially on the inside, the right hand having suffered the most. A physician was summoned and the wounds dressed, and it is thought the burns are not deep enough to leave any bad effects. Meanwhile he cannot use his hands in the least, and it will be some time before he can do so.

Hard Times for Itinerant Peddlers.

For a long time the merchants of the town have complained of the peddlers which infest the place, selling a vast variety of goods, from pins and pencils to dry goods and clothing. There were six of these peddlers' carts in Thorndike one forenoon last week, and the sales which are made from them materially affect the amount of money left to be spent with the local merchants. Complaint has been made, and an attempt is being made to drive them out. The payment of $50 for a state license allows these peddlers to dispose of their goods wherever they choose, but many of them have none, and do not take out a town license. They are a peripatetic lot, here to-day and miles away to-morrow, and care little for the requirements of the law. On Monday Deputy Sheriff Studley apprehended Harris Feingold of Worcester and Elias and Joseph Witkin of Springfield, and their cases will be tried next Monday; all were peddling dry goods. Wednesday morning Raphael Thomas, a black-baired maiden of eighteen summers, was fined $10, which was paid by a Springfield man who it is said furnishes the capital on which many of the peddlers do business. Yesterday Anthony Styphon paid $8 for peddling without a license.

Illegal Liquor Selling Comes High.

The case of William Connolly of Thorndike, for illegal liquor keeping, came up in the district court last Saturday. Connolly withdrew his plea of not guilty, and pleaded guilty to illegally keeping liquor with intent to sell, and to keeping a liquor nuisance. This was Connolly's second offense, he pleading guilty and paying a fine of $75 in the other case; his bondsman had been winking knowingly and reporting about town that he would settle this time for $100 and a promise to get out of the business. Connolly pleaded guilty and promised to go out of the business and stay out, promising to go to his brother in Ware as soon as he could sell his belongings in Thorndike. Then Judge Robinson said, "$150 for illegal keeping, and the other case continued from day to day for sentence." It was a knock-out for the bondsmen, who hadn't that amount of the "long green" on hand, and the matter was again continued until Monday, when it was paid. This will rid the town of Connolly so far as illegal liquor selling is concerned, for should he attempt it again he is liable to be sentenced at any moment on the other case, which would mean a jail term, the thing he most dreads.

The Democratic caucus for the nomination of town officers will be held in the town house this evening at 7:30, and a special train will leave Palmer at 7:10, returning after the caucus. Bishop and A. A. Warriner, and for tax collector H. A. Northrop.

After having been refused almost every other place in town which was suitable for their purposes, the A. P. A's. have finally secured the use of the Advent chapel on Park street for their meetings. It has always been the policy of the Adventists to decline to rent the building for other than religious services, and this action of the trustees is severely commented upon by some of the members of the society who have in no way been consulted in the matter.

A horse which had been clipped and whose hair had only attained about half its ordinary length, was left hitched for more than an hour on Main street Wednesday afternoon in the piercing cold wind without a covering. The animal became so uneasy that it nearly broke its halter, and would probably have been cared for soon by an officer had not the two young men who had left it there appeared. An introduction to the law regarding cruelty to animals was needed in this case, if ever.

At the meeting of the school committee on Monday it was voted that hereafter new scholars will be admitted to the primary grades only during the first two months of the school year, September and October; those who do not enter at that time must wait until the next September. This action is taken because of the habit which many parents have of keeping their younger children at home during the winter and then sending them to school when warm weather comes, the new scholars proving a great drawback to the work of those more advanced.

The body of William F. Gough, 42, a former resident of Palmer who died suddenly in Boston last Friday night, was brought here for burial on Saturday, interment being in the South Belchertown cemetery, Rev. F. E Jenkins officiating. Mr. Gough was a son of the late Mrs. George Shumway, and was well known among railroad men, having for a number of years been an engineer on the Fitchburg road. Mr. Gough died shortly after finishing a run of 150 miles on the road. When his engine was brought to a standstill in the Fitchburg station at Boston last Friday night he had to be helped from the cab to the station platform by his fireman; he was pale and weak, and help was called, but before anyone could reach him he sank into the fireman's arms and expired, the cause being heart disease.

The road will be relaid, but the width will be 54 feet, the present width at the southeast corner of the cemetery. It will be remembered that from that point the road now widens to 66 feet at the northeast corner of the cemetery. It was not announced whether or not the road be set toward the east to give the cemetery commissioners the extra land they desire for the wall and arch. The hearing was attended by several of the petitioners and by Selectman Norcross.

Boy Loses a Hand.

A terrible accident took place at R. M. & T. Reynolds's new mill Tuesday between 11 a. m. and noon. George Clough, in cleaning a carding machine, caught his left hand in the gearing, mangling it so badly that amputation at the wrist was necessary. The operation was performed by Dr. G. E. Fuller, assisted by Dr. F. W. Ellis. George is the only son of Mr. and Mrs. Charles L. Clough of South Monson, and is about 16 years old. He had been employed in the mill but a few months. A correspondent writes to the JOURNAL: "One of the sorest needs of Monson at the present time is an equal rights club. Not a club for the promotion of woman suffrage, ah, no! but a club that would recognize and concede to each member and to the rest of the town the God-given right to think for themselves."

The chimney of R. F. Bradway's furniture and undertaking establishment took fire Wednesday afternoon, and burned so briskly that Mr. Bradway became alarmed, and pulling a stovepipe from the chimney sent a stream of town water "up the flue." The large party which went from Monson to Willimantic last Saturday evening to attend "1492" was dissatisfied with the arrangement made by the New London Northern railroad company for convenience. When the special train arrived at 6 30 it consisted of but one passenger car. A telegram was sent to Willimantic to postpone the play until the arrival of the regular train at about 9 o'clock, and many along the line were obliged to wait for that. Four cars brought the party home. The bridge over which the train passed at Willington was carried away by the freshet about an hour later.

The dramatic lecture by Prof. Henry L. Southworth, of the Emerson School of Oratory, at Memorial Hall last Friday evening was the third of the Academy course of entertainments, and was very fine. The heavy and continuous rains the last of last week caused many washouts and considerable damage in this vicinity. The water pouring over the upper dam and down under the East street bridge was a magnificent sight. Two boys, Edward McMahon and Joe Bushworth, nearly lost their lives below the village. They had made a raft of two doors and pushed out upon the waters that covered the meadows, but were caught in the current of the river and were carried down stream for some distance, but escaped by jumping into the water and swimming to the shore.

LEGISLATIVE MATTERS.

BOSTON, March 4, 1896.

The unusual circumstance occurred in the hall of the House on Friday of the presentation to the state of a bust of the governor during the governor's term of office. It was the opinion of Gov. Greenhalge,—and it seemed to be the opinion of some of the Legislature also,—that it would have been in better taste for the city of Lowell to have postponed its presentation until his term had expired. Most people doubtless have the idea that commemorations belong to those whose term of public service has expired, not to those who are still in official life where they may become unpopular before their terms expire. But there was a phase of this presentation which made it seem as if it were prompted more by the opposition to the A. P. A. than by any other active motive, for the speech of Mayor Courtney of Lowell in making the presentation was especially marked by complimentary mention, in strong terms, of the attitude of the governor against the A. P. A. There could not be the slightest doubt as to what he referred to, and the appreciation of that phase of his excellency's character seemed to be the most marked feature of the speech. Lieut. Gov. Wolcott was cordial and dignified, as usual, and it would not be too much to say that the reception which he received at the hands of the House, or the public audience, when he stepped to the front to reply, was in the nature of a genuine political boom. For a few seconds it did not seem as if the audience caught on to the possible chance of expressing their opinion, and so the applause swelled from a modest beginning to a strong climax before opportunity was given for the lieutenant governor to speak. There is no question that he is looked upon as the coming nominee for governor, nor that he is greatly popular in the Republican ranks. In personal appearance there has not been a Republican in public life for many years who bears himself as nobly as Wolcott does. He is erect and tall, and has a fine face and expression. Singularly enough the same traits distinguish his coming opponent from other Democrats, for George Fred Williams has also an erect, spirited, noble bearing which few men in public or private life have. Williams is not as tall as Wolcott, nor has he that fine contrast of gray hair and ruddy countenance, but each is uncommonly upright in poise, and each is a forceful speaker. Each will accord the other full gentlemanly and courteous treatment, and each will talk directly upon the issue of the campaign.

Wednesday, March 4, was a day whose like has never been seen before at the state house. It was not long after nine o' clock in the forenoon that Capt. Hamlin, in the anteroom of the governor's chamber, told all inquirers that the governor was dying and that it was only a question of minutes how long he could survive. Arrangements had been made by members of the staff at Lowell to telephone at once upon the death of the governor to the executive department, so that the news should be received there first of all in Boston. So it continued through the day. A messenger waited in the outer room of the department to carry the expected news speedily to the courts in order that they might adjourn in memory of the illustrious departed. Every inquirer was told that the governor was expected to die at any moment. So it continued during the entire day. Not a word of cheer or comfort was received from Lowell, but only the reiterated message that his death was instantly expected. The Senate and House met as usual under this shadow and went about their business. In the Senate the special assignment was the report of the committee which was appointed to attend the funeral of Ex-Gov. Robinson and to report resolutions.

It was an occasion to darken any public body,—the governor dying and the subject of the hour being the merits and honors of a distinguished deceased governor. The speakers felt the gloom upon the situation, and never before has there been such a shadow over the legislative proceedings. The speeches in honor of ex-Gov. Robinson were of a high order. Senator Irwin of Northampton was the first speaker, and he brought to his theme the same genius for eloquence which marked his speech last year on the transfer of the codfish and this year upon the adoption of the resolutions in favor of an equestrian statue for Gen. Joseph Hooker. Other senators spoke eloquently, particularly Senator Chase of Holyoke, who told of the departed as the beloved school teacher of many of his personal friends in Chicopee. After the Senate had adopted the resolutions and adjourned as a mark of respect, they were taken into the House, where the eulogies upon the character and abilities of the departed were repeated. Messrs. J. H. Mellen of Worcester and Stone of Springfield spoke with particular effectiveness and rose to the height of the occasion, setting forth fittingly the high character of the lamented statesman and the extent of his service to the state. The House also adopted the resolutions unanimously by a rising vote, and then adjourned. The shadow of Gov. Greenhalge's condition was upon all, and the seriousness of the day will be long remembered.

The Legislature is now at the height of the season of committee hearings. Such crowds of people as have been at the state house this week seem to have never been seen there before upon the errand of petitioners. The old hall of the house of representatives is brought into frequent requisition, while other rooms which are very large are also needed for the accommodation of the throngs who bring business for the Legislature to do. It might be thought that it would be impossible for so many people to be interested in matters before the Legislature for them to give up their occupations and be at expense of travel and hotel bills to attend. But the demonstration is in the fact that they are on hand from all parts of the state, and seem to have a great deal of important matter for their representatives to attend to.

One of the great questions which has been brought in is the petition of Henry M. Whitney and others for a monopoly of the production of fuel gas for a long term of years. The Boston papers, which have before now felt the effect of Whitney's enterprise in the amount of reading matter which they print for the public good, once more bear witness to his presence before the Legislature with some urgent wants which the representatives of the people are expected to gratify in their capacity as purveyors to the general prosperity of the Commonwealth. But there are rivals for the privilege, and there are other petitioners who believe that they control patents which will discount Whitney's scheme out of sight. Hence it is not to be expected that the Legislature will be wholly subservient to the schemes of Whitney, unless he uses lavishly the power which he displayed in the old days of his control of the West End street railway company. It would be well for the country legislators to keep a sharp lookout upon these different gas schemes which are before the General Court.

The farmers are on hand in large numbers to protest against the arbitrary powers, as they term them, of the cattle commission. Indeed, the farmers are divided among themselves, and more than ever are becoming convinced that the course of the commissioners is for the good of the state as a whole and of the farmers in particular.

Remonstrances against a statue to Gen. Butler have been put in, signed by Henry Lee and several other Lees, John C. Ropes, the historian of Napoleon, who ought to understand military operations, Gamaliel Bradford, and others. There is sure to be a fight over the question, for the friends and opponents of Butler take strong grounds on their respective sides. LANDON.

If You Have a Sick Child This Surely is a Message of Hope.

This is the best of news for parents of weakly or sickly children. It is a fact that our people have heretofore not had the same opportunity for having their children who suffer from chronic or lingering complaints treated and cured by eminent specialists in children's diseases as do the residents of the great cities where such skilled physicians reside. In other words our people have been debarred from seeking a cure for their children by the great physicians, owing to the cost of travel to the large city and the high fees charged by such physicians.

Here, therefore, is a chance for the cure of the children of our community which should not be lost. Dr. Greene, of 31 Temple Place, Boston, Mass., who is beyond doubt the most successful specialist in curing diseases of children, offers to give free consultation by mail in all cases of children's complaints. Parents have the privilege of consulting Dr. Greene by letter, describing their children's diseases, and he will, after carefully considering the symptoms, write a letter fully explaining the trouble, telling everything about their complaint so plainly that you will understand exactly what ails your children. He will also give his advice, founded upon his vast experience and wonderful success in treating such cases, as to just what to do to effect a cure. All this will cost you nothing, and you can thus have consultation with the best-known physician and acknowledged most successful specialist in the world without leaving home and at no expense whatever. The doctor is the discoverer of that greatest of medicines, Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy, and has discovered many other most valuable remedies. Write to him now about your child, for this is a chance of cure which you may never have again.

We know of but one community in the world where dyspepsia is practically unknown, and that is the Shakers of Mount Lebanon, N. Y. These good people have been studying the subject of digestion for more than a hundred years, and that they understand it pretty thoroughly, is evidenced in the foregoing fact. Their Digestive Cordial is the safest and best remedy in cases of indigestion that we know of. A trial bottle can be had through your druggist for the trifling sum of 10 cents.

The Shaker Digestive Cordial supplies the system with food already digested, and at the same time aids the digestion of other foods. It will almost instantly relieve the ordinary symptoms of indigestion, and no sufferer need to be told what these are.

JAMES McKEON'S

stock of women's and misses' garments at a third.

We have bought of the assignee of the James McKeon business the entire stock of women's, misses and children's garments for less than one-third of the cost to McKeon.

We have no use for such a stock. Didn't want to buy it. It was simply forced on us by the ridiculousness of the price. We ought to be ready, at all times, to gobble up such an opportunity to make a snap for our customers.

We have piled it on table, and racks, marked it McKeon's stock, and,—how shall we say it—we mean to get rid of it in short order.

We shan't make a cent on it probably; shall be satisfied if we come out even; but what an advertisement it will be.

A couple of hundred heavy jackets, this year's make and styles.

McKeon's prices, $20 to $30 apiece—our prices, $6.75 to $9.75.

Heavy jackets and three quarter length coats, $2 50 a garment—mostly garments of a season or two back.

Jackets at $1, $2, $3, $4, $5—a half, a quarter, a fifth, a tenth, and even a twentieth of what they were sold at.

Children's jackets and gretchens, misses' jackets, women's waists, blazers, etc.,—one dollar a garment.

A hundred spring capes—McKeon's price $15 to $25; our prices $2.50 to $7.50.

Mackintoshes---imported sorts---grays and brown mixtures, mostly.

McKeon's price $20 and $22.50; our prices $8 and $9.95.

The Great Dissolution Sale.

A quarter of a million dollars can scarcely be got out of the goods in the store faster than we are getting it. We've had two weeks of record-breaking selling; two weeks of impressive values. Tumbles have come one after another until now the store is a great hive of bargains.

What we are doing is making new times here. We scarcely expect belief by those who do not come to see.

We've Called His Bluff.

Best English time: 63 3-4 miles per hour.
New York Central time: 64 1-4 miles.

Ho, Johnny Bull, wipe off your chin
And stop your bluffing talk;
When Yankees want to beat your trains,
They just get out and walk.

You said about a month ago,
With much excess of bluff,
That when we knew how fast you went,
We'd simply cry: "Enough."

You also made a few remarks
About Old England's style,
Of splitting atmosphere and such,
That made us Yankees smile.

You intimated, more or less,
That as you'd set the pegs,
If we should try to equal it,
We'd run clean off our legs.

You furthermore asserted that
You'd make the time so fast
That we would hang that record up,
And keep it there to last.

Some other things perhaps you said,
But in the later light
Of what we've done along our rails,
We'll drop them out of sight.

For we have very recently
Slid through to Buffalo
At such a record-breaking speed
That your best time seems slow.

We hauled a heavier train than yours,
And made a longer run,
And what you thought was blamed hard work
We thought was jolly fun.

Now, Johnny, trot your fastest out
Against us, any day,
And let us show you how we'll dust
Its headlight all the way.

Or if you'd rather not try that,
Go and do your very best,
And when you've got your record made
We'll knock it galley-west.

We don't talk much about such things,
We're modest, don't you know,
But John, whatever else we are,
You bet that we ain't slow.

CONFIDENTIAL.

And say, John, while you're on the hunt
For something that is fleet,
Perhaps you'd better try to find
A yacht that we can't beat.

Spring Medicine

Your blood in Spring is almost certain to be full of impurities—the accumulation of the winter months. Bad ventilation of sleeping rooms, impure air in dwellings, factories and shops, overeating, heavy, improper foods, failure of the kidneys and liver properly to do extra work thus thrust upon them, are the prime causes of this condition. It is of the utmost importance that you

Purify Your Blood

Now, as when warmer weather comes and the tonic effect of cold bracing air is gone, your weak, thin, impure blood will not furnish necessary strength. That tired feeling, loss of appetite, will open the way for serious disease, ruined health, or breaking out of humors and impurities. To make pure, rich, red blood Hood's Sarsaparilla stands unequalled. Thousands testify to its merits. Millions take it as their Spring Medicine. Get Hood's, because

BABY AND THE LIGHT.

It is a very common thing to see an infant gaze unblinkingly at a bright light without any attempt being made on the part of the parent or nurse to prevent it. A still more harmful practice is to allow a baby to take its daily ride with its little face upturned to the bright open skies without the carriage sunshade to protect the eyes. If there is no bright sunlight the nurse takes it for granted that the shade is unnecessary, forgetting that gazing up into the sky is really painful after the eyes become tired of the bright light.

It seems to be the general supposition that infants' eyes have remarkable powers of endurance in this respect, and that no harm will result from the exposure. This is a great mistake, for an infant's eyes are, in reality, more susceptible to injury than an adult's. A child is totally unable to protect itself during the first weeks of life by moving its head or shading its eyes, therefore its nurse or attendant should protect it from exposure to strong sunlight, gaslight or strong artificial light of any kind.

The eyelids of an infant are thin and almost transparent, and the eyelashes but little developed, so, even when the baby is asleep, a strong light should not be allowed to fall on its closed eyes.

It is not wise to fall into the opposite extreme, however, and keep the child in a dark room, or shroud its face when out of doors with heavy veils, since these practices render the eyes unnaturally sensitive, but the endeavor should be made to allow only diffused light to reach the sensitive little orbs.

When children have passed the age of infancy and begin to use their eyes intelligently, parents should make it a point to study and ascertain the condition of their vision. Says a well-known authority, "a slight defect in the shape of the eye, constituting shortsightedness or farsightedness, may practically disappear, so as to cause the individual no trouble, if the eyes are properly managed, while on the other hand it may be aggravated into a serious impairment of vision if the child is improperly trained in the use of the eyes."

The power of sight in later years is much influenced by the time of life at which children are required to undertake close and continuous efforts with the eyes. For most children this continued effort begins when they commence school, and it is often aggravated by poorly lighted apartments. A child with weak or sensitive eyes should not be called upon to practice music from notes for any great length of time while the child is young. If the practice is supposed to be absolutely necessary, divide the time into three, four, or even five periods, so that the eyes may rest, as constant gazing at the small black dots will weaken the strongest eyes.

Where squinting is noticeable in children one may be sure there is defective formation of the eyes. In the majority of cases this results in too great flatness of the eye. This should be attended to as soon as it is noticed, as the longer it continues the worse are the results. The remedy for squinting in its early stages lies in the use of glasses, but if the squinting has been allowed to go for several years a slight operation will be needed, and there should be no hesitation in submitting to it. A good occulist should be consulted if there is the least sign of imperfect vision while the child is young; this may save trouble in later years.—Boston Journal.

HER TURN.

Mrs. Hilber—"I was down town shopping with Mrs. Dwindler to-day."

Hilber—"Get anything?"

Mrs. Hilber—"Oh, I had to get a few little things for the kitchen. Really, dear, some of the old utensils were not fit to use."

Hilber—"How much was the bill?"

Mrs. Hilber—"Eight dollars. Then I saw the loveliest set of china, just for everyday use, and I simply couldn't resist it. Only $18 for the lot."

Hilber—"Umph! Anything else?"

Mrs. Hilber—"Some of the loveliest books! I had a dozen of the latest novels sent. Just think, they were so cheap! Only $14 for all of them."

Hilber—"Ah, indeed! I suppose you bought yourself some clothes."

Mrs. Hilber—"Only a few little things I had to have, dear. A hat—think, for only $18! I know you will like it. Some shoes for $7, and eight yards of the loveliest dress goods you ever saw. Only $2 a yard."

Hilber—"Is that all?"

Mrs. Hilber—"Oh, there were a few more little things of no particular consequence. Necessities, of course, but of trifling cost."

Hilber—"Madam, do you know what you have been doing?"

Mrs. Hilber—"Why, wh-what do you mean?"

Hilber—"You have been ruining me. Do you realize how I have to toil and slave to make the money necessary just to keep the roof over our heads? And now you inform me, in the coolest possible manner, that you have been buying, without my consent, what you are pleased to term as a 'few little things.' Bah!"

Mrs. Hilber—"But, my dear—"

Hilber—"Don't 'my dear' me. Did Mrs. Dwindler, who you say was with you, spend anything!"

Mrs. Hilber—"No. She said she couldn't afford it."

Hilber—"Precisely. What man in moderate circumstances can afford it? Have you any idea, madam, of how much the 'few little things' amounted to?'

Mrs Hilber—"I have. Here is the memorandum. Just $120."

Hilber—"And do you know, madam, what that sum represents?"

Mrs. Hilber—"I do, my dear. It represents the sum Mrs. Dwindler says you won from her husband at poker last night."—Harper's Bazar.

WOMEN'S EXALTED MISSION.

Certainly there is wisdom for two young people who have sworn to love each other, no matter whether there is poverty or wealth, no matter whether the days are bright or dark, to have a home of their own, writes Ruth Ashmore discussing "The Mistress of the Small House," in Ladies' Home Journal. Boarding-house life is bad for women, and I do not believe that any man has ever really enjoyed it. God created women to make homes—to make homes for the men they love and for the children whom God will send to them. And a home must be started at the beginning of this new life. Do not wait for a big house and many servants, but make happiness exist in a little house with one maid as a help. It can be done. I know it can. Do not shrug your shoulders, and say you do not like housework. Work is only disagreeable when it is badly done, and from washing silver and glass to dusting the bric-a-brac and beating up a cake, everything may be daintily done and well done if you go about it in the right way and with the right spirit. You will have to be considerate and you will have to be patient. You will certainly make mistakes, but each mistake is one step toward success. Burden yourself with patience, consideration and tenderness; you will need to make calls upon them often and often. Then you will gain so much. You will be the happy housewife, the lady of the house who has the right to dispense hospitality and good will; the mistress, not only of the house, but of the heart of your husband, because for him you have created a home. And this is a womanly work—a better monument to you, my dear, than the painting of a wonderful picture, the writing of a great book, or the composing of a fine piece of music. From out a home all virtues and all great works may come. No man ever made a home. He does not know how. The woman's brain, heart and hands are necessary, and a home is such a beautiful thing. It means rest, it means peace and it means love. Make one for your husband and let him find these three great joys in its four walls.

WHERE HE DREW THE LINE.

The man who sold windmills adjusted his chair at a new angle, crossed his feet on the railing of the balcony, locked his hands over the top of his head and began:

"Curious fellows, those Wayback farmers are; droll chaps to deal with, too; cute and sharp at a bargain. Most of them know a good thing when they see it, so I took a good many orders; but once in a while I come across a conservative old hayseed whose eyes are closed to anything modern. One of that sort helped me to a good laugh the other day, and I might as well pass it on.

"He was a genial, white-headed old fellow, who owned several fine farms, with prime orchards and meadows, barns and fences in apple-pie order, and dwellings serene in comfort.

"He listened closely while I expatiated on the excellence of our make of machines; then taking a fresh supply of Cavendish, he squared himself in his chair, with his hands in his pockets, and held forth in this fashion:

"'Waal, stranger,' he said, 'your machine may be all right; but now see here. I settled here in the airly fifties, broke the trail for the last few miles, blazin' the trees as we came along. I had a fair start, good health, a yoke o' cattle, a cow, an ax, with one bit and three coppers in my pocket. I built a log house with a shake ruff and a puncheon floor, an' a cow shed of popple poles ruffed with sod. I worked hard, up airly an' down late, clearin' up land by degrees, an' diggin' a livin' out o' the sile by main strength, an' no favors except the blessin' o' the Almighty. The Lord's been good to me. He's gi'n me house an' barns; He's gi'n me horses an' cattle; He's gi'n me sheep an' swine, an' feathered fowl o' many kinds. An' now, stranger, after all that, I'll be everlasting durned if I'll be so mean as to ask him to pump the water for 'em.'

"And then," continued the story-teller, "he brought his hand down on his knee with a whack that fairly echoed through the house. Of course I couldn't urge him to purchase after that expression of his sentiments, and I left him. Independent, wasn't he?"

Then the windmill man chuckled, as if he enjoyed the memory of the scene he had just described; and his hearers enjoyed his story so much that when he left he was richer by three or four orders.—Harper's Magazine.

A WELL MORTGAGED COW.

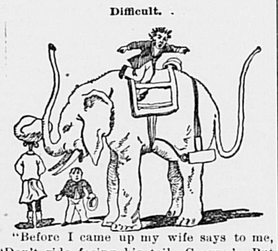
A few days ago, not more than a thousand miles from Lake County, a collector called on farmer for the payment of a note secured by a chattel mortgage, says the Vermillion (S. D.) Freeman. The farmer was obdurate, and gave no satisfaction that he would ever pay the note. Finally the collector said: "Well, I'll have to take the 11 cows named in the mortgage."

"Oh, no; you haven't got a mortgage on 11 cows on this farm."

"Why, yes I have," and the collector pulled out a copy of the mortgage and read as follows: "One red and white cow, one cow spotted red and white, one red cow with white spots, one cow with white spot in forehead, one red cow with two white hind feet, one white cow with red spots on side, one white and red cow, one red cow with two white fore feet, one white cow with red spot on shoulders, one red cow with white spot on hips, one white cow spotted with red. Now, how do you like that?" continued the collector.

"Oh, that's all right; I see you have 11 mortgages on my old red and white cow; there she is down in the pasture. The boys will go down and help you catch her."

Difficult.



"Before I came up my wife says to me, 'Don't ride facing his tail, George.' But how am I to know which is his tail?"—London's Funny Wonder.

THE EXPLANATION.

A little Jap was on trial in the police court for defrauding an innkeeper. He had testified in his own behalf that he had paid his room rent for a month.

"How much did you pay?" asked the prosecuting attorney.

The little Jap sat and stared at his questioner.

The query was repeated.

"Quarter of 'leven."

Everybody glanced at the clock and observed that the time was correctly given.

"Yes, it's quarter to 11, but I want to know how much room rent you paid."

"Quarter to 'leven," repeated the Jap.

"You don't understand. How much did you pay?"

The question was repeated in various forms, but that was the only answer the Jap would give, and he grew more vehement with every repetition.

He was locked in a padded cell in the Receiving Hospital and examined before the commissioners of insanity, when it was learned that he paid $10.75 for his room.—San Francisco Post.

HE WAS SURE OF IT.—"My father," said Simpson, solemnly, "was more sensitive to colds than anybody I ever knew. The slightest exposure gave him a cold." "That must have been very disagreeable." "Indeed, it was. He never could sit near a draught for a minute without catching cold. I remember on one occasion he was sitting in the house of a friend, when all at once my father began to sneeze. He insisted that there was a draught in the room. Every effort was made to discover where the draught was, but in vain. The doors and windows were closed, and there was no fireplace, but my father kept on sneezing and insisting that there must be a draught in the room, and so there was." Where was it?' "It was found that the stopper had been left out of the vinegar bottle."

POWER OF OLD AND NEW NAVY.—The old Constitution could, with her best guns, at 1000 yards, pierce 22 inches of oak about the thickness of her own hull at water-line. The 8-inch steel covering at the Atlanta's water-line has nearly the same resisting power as the Constitution's 22-inches of oak. The Atlanta's six-inch guns will, at 1000 yards, bore through a surface having 20 times the resisting power of her own or the Constitution's hull at water line. At the same range her eight-inch guns pierce 14 inches of iron.—President E. B. Andrews, in Scribner's.

Go and do good to others. Like the wise men, bring your offerings, and offer to the new born King your heart's best gold of love, and frankincense of praise, and myrrh of penitence. Bring everything of your heart's best, and somewhat of your substance also, for this is a day of good tidings, and it were unseemly to appear before the Lord empty. Come and worship God manifest in the flesh, and be filled with His light and sweetness by the power of the Holy Spirit.—Charles H. Spurgeon.

This unique specimen of a certificate of death was tendered by a native apothecary at an inquest in India: "I think she died or lost her life for want of food or on account of starvation, and perhaps for other things of her comfortables, and most probably she died of drowning."

To Complete the Set.

"Will you take a hand?" asked the maiden fair,
"Just to complete the set;
"The others are ready and waiting there,
And one hand's vacant yet."
"With pleasure," I answered, "my pretty maid,
I will do as you desire.
Can I name the game?" "Oh, yes," she said,
"'T is life," and she blushed like fire.
"And yours is the hand, my maiden fair,
That I see is vacant yet."
"'T is yours," she answered, "that is, if you care,
Just to complete the set."

CHINA'S DOWN-TRODDEN WOMEN.

The women of China, or, at least, those of the coast cities, said a man who has been living in China for several years and is now in Washington on private business, are neither riding bicycle nor wearing bloomers, nor yet again are they making the strenuous efforts to secure suffrage which characterize some of their American sisters. Still, while I can't say that I am a woman's rights man, I am free to confess that I would not oppose such a movement in China, even if it went to the extreme of giving the women all that the most radical of them claim, for the condition of the women in the celestial kingdom calls for reform with a big R. Among the highest classes women have a position considerably higher than in the middle and lowest classes, but the best that the Chinese social system can do for women is not far above slavery. When a woman marries, be it to mandarin or coolie, she becomes his slave to all intents and purposes, and when he dies she is the property of his mother, if the old lady is living. Of course, they don't call it slavery in China, but our American women would call it slavery of the rankest kind. Nor is the wife entitled to hold even the position she does alone. There are other wives or women who must be recognized by the wife as having certain rights that she must respect. True, she is wife No. 1, and is recognized as the head of the wifehood, so to speak, and she holds her place as long as she is faithful, but notwithstanding the pre-eminence of her position, it is not such a one as would be at all satisfactory to the average American woman. Wives of this kind are only found among the higher classes or those well to do, because among the poor the expense of having more than one woman in the family cannot be borne.

As soon as a woman is born in a Chinese family, the question arises what shall be done with her. A girl baby is not what is wanted, as a rule, and particularly so among the poor, for she must be cared for, and does not pay for her keep as the male children do when they are grown. If the people are extremely poor, and there are already girls in the fold, the latest girl baby disappears mysteriously. Possibly the river could tell where the body is, possibly not. In any event, that girl baby is gone like the extra kittens that used to appear about our homes when we were children. If there are no other girls, one will be kept, and in due time, say when she is 10 or 12 years of age, she will be disposed of to a man who is to become her husband for a consideration. He pays whatever the stipulated sum may be, she is delivered at his door, a feast and fireworks may follow in celebration of the event, or may not, and her slavery begins.

Girls become mothers at the very earliest age, and they are most prolific, averaging a child a year until they are completely broken down. It is a principle of Confucius that a man's chances for Heaven are greatly improved by the number of descendants he has to pray for him, and he hasn't any chance at all if he has none, though a slight chance is given him by the adoption of a son. Chinese husbands are extremely jealous, and their wives are kept in such seclusion and have so few opportunities to take exercise in the open air that their health is soon undermined and death comes to them early. I can scarcely recall having seen more than half a dozen gray-haired women during my entire residence in the country.

When a woman is old she is no longer attractive to her husband, and, though he ostensibly cares for her, he takes to himself a young and attractive woman, and lets the old one go out and do such work as she can find. A great many women go about from house to house patching and darning old clothes, and they are known among foreigners as "sew-sew" women. They sit on the doorsteps of the houses where they happen to get some work to do and sew there, because if they are permitted to come inside they will be likely to steal a good deal more than the clothes are worth. Their earnings are very small, and so also is the the expense of their living. Wives are not hard-working women usually, except the wives of sampan and junk men, who, with their families, comprise the teeming boat life of China. Here the women stand shoulder to shoulder with their husbands, doing exactly the same kind of work, rowing, carrying freight or luggage, and having in addition the burden of their children.

FELL BACK ON THE CLOUDS.

The following advice, given to a young married woman who was visited by another older and more experienced one, may be helpful to some of our readers:

When the visitor arose to go the hostess came with her to the door, and out upon the pleasant piazza, which, however, looked a little dusty in the corners.

"Oh, dear!" said the young wife, "how provoking the servants are! I told Mary to sweep the piazza thoroughly, and now look how dusty it is."

"Grace," said the older woman, looking into the disturbed young face with kindly humorous eyes, "I am an old housekeeper. Let me give you a bit of advice: Never direct people's attention to defects. Unless you do so they will rarely see them.

"Now, if I had been in your place and noticed the dirt, I should have said: 'How blue the sky is!' or 'How beautiful the clouds are!' or 'How bracing the air is!' Then I should have looked up at that as I spoke, and should have gotten you safely down the steps and out of sight without your seeing the dust."

HOME TRAINING.—If the mothers would only realize the full significance of the truth expressed in the trite saying, "As the twig is bent the tree inclines," the next generation of men and women would surely be better in every way, for it is true that the future well-being of the man or woman, physically, mentally, and spiritually, depends upon the thousand and one little acts of seeming unimportance that make up the child's daily life. It is the home training the child receives that makes its future "for better or for worse."

A SISTER OF CHARITY.

A beautiful story is told of a Sister of Charity, who was returning to Boston from New York, on a Sound steamer, recently. As tea-time was about to be announced, a colored waiter approached her and suggested that perhaps it would be pleasanter for her to go to the table before the general rush of the passengers. She assented and took her place at the table for a very simple tea. The waiter left her without waiting for an order, and was gone so long that the sister wondered what had become of him. At last he appeared with a large tray loaded with all the luxuries of the season and set it down before her. Of course the modest sister was quite taken back, and said to the waiter: "You have made a mistake; that is not for me."

"Oh, yes, sister," said he, "it is for you."

"But I did not order such a supper as that; it certainly must have been ordered for someone else and you have brought it to me by mistake."

"My, sister, there is no mistake; it was ordered for you."

Convinced at last, the sister ate all she wanted. Before she could leave the table, the waiter appeared with a second course of sweets, ices, fruits, etc.

"My dear man," said the sister, "that is too much. Who has ordered all these things for me?"

"There is the gentleman who gave the order," said the darkey.

Then go and express my greatful thanks to him, and ask him for the pleasure of his name."

The darkey conveyed the message to the gentleman, and returned with this reply: "Tell the sister that my name is of no consequence. I am a stranger, and may never see her again; but say that I am always happy to avail myself of every favorable opportunity of testifying my profound respect for the Sisters of Charity, whom I first learned to venerate and love in our late war."—Boston Herald.

A Prayer.

Thank God for life,
Even though it brings much bitterness and strife,
And all our fairest dreams are wrecked and lost,
Even though there is more ill than good in life,
We cling to life and reckon not the cost.
Thank God for life.

Thank God for love,
For, though sometimes grief follows in its wake,
Still we forget love's sorrow in love's joy,
And cherish tears with smiles for love's sweet sake—
Thank God for love.

Thank God for pain;
No tears hath ever yet been shed in vain,
And in the end each sorrowing heart shall find
No curse, but blessings, in the hand of pain.
Even when He smiteth, then God is most kind.
Thank God for pain.

Thank God for death.
Who touches anguished lips and stills the breath,
And bringeth peace unto each troubled breast
From which all grief hath flown? Oh, blessed death!
God's sweetest gift! The name in heaven is rest!
Thank God for death.

THE CHURCH AND TEMPERANCE.

Sermon Preached by Rev. F. E. Jenkins, in the Congregational church, Palmer, Sunday Morning, March 8.

But ye are a chosen generation, a royal priesthood, an holy nation, a peculiar people; that ye should show forth the praises of Him who hath called you out of darkness into his marvellous light.—1 Peter, 2-9.

The special subject of temperance is one on which I do not often speak from the pulpit. You who have been regular attendants in this church for the past three years will remember that I have spoken from this pulpit on this or a kindred subject scarcely a half dozen times. There are two reasons for this: First—Whenever the gospel of Jesus Christ is preached it is the power of God which makes for every good thing in this world, including temperance. It is the basis and the power of every reform which the world needs. If this Gospel does its deep work of converting men through and through to the Lord Jesus Christ, and if it builds them up in character according to Christian standards, then the temperance cause will be thoroughly established. The reforms of this world are absolutely dependent upon this gospel for their advancement and permanence. There may be a brief agitation, and an appearance of progress for a time without the gospel, but they will soon be among the things of the past. Like the waves from a stone cast into the water, they spread themselves out on the surface of human affairs and are no more. But when the gospel of Christ moves upon human affairs in and through the Church, it makes changes which, though they may come slowly, come to remain. In preaching the gospel from this pulpit from Sabbath to Sabbath, I am doing more for the temperance cause than is possible for me to do in any other way.

In the second place, I speak directly on this subject occasionally only, because the man who rides a hobby is not the man who accomplishes much in the establishment of that in which he is interested. If one thinks, talks and dreams of one subject only, he not only narrows himself, but destroys his influence in that particular line, however important the subject may be in itself. There is only one theme in this world that is large enough for a person to give all his thought and time to, and that theme is the gospel of Christ. This tires no one, but is ever fresh and wonderful in its application to human needs. One need not make a hobby of a subject even if he be an expert in it. Knowing his subject thoroughly, he times his presentation of it so that he gets attention and influences action, while at the same time he does not ignore the vast realm of truth and of need of which his special subject is but a part.

But this morning I would speak of the relation of the Church in general to the temperance cause, and of this church and the other churches of Palmer, in particular, to the "No-License" issue. In speaking thus I do not leave the gospel behind, but rather present a special phase of it of vital importance at this time.

THE HIGH STANDARD OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

My text reveals a high standard for the Christian Church. First of all, it is a "chosen generation." It originated in the mind and heart of God. It is a people who have responded to His choosing love to be made just what He wants them for time and eternity. If we had originated our movement toward God, we might perhaps have stated the terms on which we would have come into agreement with Him. But he has chosen us, and we have come to Him in response to the terms which He has stated. We are His people, and if true to Him must live as He wishes us to live in the world. The Church is a "royal priesthood." Its members stand between God and the world. The world can have of His spiritual and moral blessings only what God gives through His people. The world must be brought to Him by His people; we are ambassadors for God, and in His name we beseech the world to be reconciled to Him. We are the divinely appointed priesthood for the world in its unbelief and sin, and we bear it to God in our prayers, and claim from Him His salvation because He has appointed us to be His priests.

The Church is a "holy nation." Political Israel has passed out of existence, but spiritual Israel remains forever. We are the children of Abraham as spiritual descendants by faith. We are the spiritual nation which God had in mind when he called Abraham to go out from Ur of Chaldees to found a nation which should exist forever. The peculiar characteristic of this nation is holiness. Nothing is allowed in it, and nothing will be a permanent part of it, that is contrary to holiness. Whatever may be our imperfections, our failure to attain the high ideal that is set before us, we have as our standard of daily living the holiness which is approved in Heaven, and when God shall have done all His work of salvation for us, and brings us into His immediate presence, there will remain in our lives nothing that is not included in the word "holiness."

It is a Heaven-high standard, towering far above the clouds, but it is the standard of the Church of to-day, in so far as it is the Church of Jesus Christ. This Church is a "peculiar people," peculiarly God's own. They have been redeemed by Him. They stand before the world committed to Him, and to His cause. What they know He approves, they approve; what they know He condemns, they condemn. The great object is to show forth the praises of God, to manifest His excellencies, to call upon the world to join in His praises, and to seek to make their own His perfections. The Church is bound by this commission to give to the world a standard of living and of action, and to furnish, from God, the power to enable the individual, and society at large, to attain to it.

RELATION OF THE CHURCH TO TEMPERANCE.

With this conception in mind, let us turn our thoughts to the relation of the Church to temperance:

First—It must give the world the pure gospel in words and acts—warmed and charged and made powerful by the Spirit of God, that there may be a basis for temperance work, and a progress in it whose impulse shall ever flow from the throne of God. It must set the world a standard of manhood no less than this, that a man be in all his life the image of God. It must teach the individual self-control under God; to master the baser elements that may appeal to him, and to live a life of victory over all that is unworthy and debasing. It must teach the world that the human soul belongs to God, and should be kept for Him; that a man's mind is made to be in constant communion with Him, and is true to itself only when it is as pure as the thought of God; that the human body is the temple of God in which He dwells by His Holy Spirit as long as that body is animated by the human soul. It must teach that whatever harms body, mind and soul in any degree, is contrary to true living, and contrary to the will of God. It must teach that poison of every kind, spiritual, moral and material, has no rightful place in a human being. Since science has proclaimed that alcohol is a deadly poison, the Church must teach that it can properly have no disastrous place in the body of a Christian. Until is is shown that some portion of this poison is good for the health of man, the Church must be against it. Under present conditions and in present light, certainly the Church must stand for total abstinence.

RELATION OF THE CHURCH TO THE SALOON.

Passing over now all that lies between this and the saloon, let us inquire what must be the attitude of the Church of to-day to the saloon of to-day. I need not take our time in rehearsing the facts about the saloon. It is with us. It has been a part of the life of this town for years. No child has ever grown to manhood in this town without a full knowledge of what the saloon does for the individual, and for society. Its ravages are in our homes. Its destructive power is in our town. Its drunkards' graves are in our cemeteries. Numbers of unhappy homes are in our midst. Mothers' hearts are aching to-day, as they have been all these past years. Our town is suffering in every interest from the saloon, and is suffering to-day as much as it ever has in its history. The money of the people has been wasted. The taxes of the taxpayer have been increased. Pauperism and crime have flourished. Our town has been sneered at far and near as being a rum town. Our business interests have suffered. Manufacturing firms here have been hindered, and others prevented from coming to us. Political matters have been corrupted. The saloon has paralyzed us, and made progress which has ever beckoned us on with our peculiar advantages, impossible.

The saloons are open by law, protected by law. We share temporarily in the profits of this terrible work, and then in the awful retribution which comes to the rum-seller, be he the man behind the bar, or the town in partnership with him.

Our bill of pauperism, nearly all of which is the result of the saloon, now consumes all the revenue from license fees, and it increases from year to year. Our poorhouse is ever waiting for enlargement. Our bill for crime,—more than three-quarters of which is a direct result of the saloon,—must be added to this, while all the time our resources are crippled by the waste of manhood and money through the constant drain of the saloon. The Church of Christ,—if true to the spiritual, moral, intellectual and material interests,—must be opposed to the saloon, unequivocally, absolutely, and forever. It can take no other ground and be true to its God, its town and itself.

THE INDIVIDUAL CHRISTIAN AND THE SALOON.

The individual Christian must take the same position or be false to his God and his Church. Through ignorance he may fail to see and to take this position, and still remain a Christian. But when the light shines upon him, and the facts disclose themselves to him, he speedily takes his place with the people of God against the saloon, or he gives up his active Christian work, his love of God and of Christ, and becomes a dead weight upon the Church.

The Church and the saloon are the strongest institutions in our land to-day Political parties may rise and fall; peace or war may be within our borders; the Church and the saloon remain through them all. They are institutions of contrary nature. The Church has for its design to cast out all evil and bring in all good. The saloon has for its object the casting out of good and bringing in of evil. There is no form of good which the Church is not called upon to advance; there is no form of evil which it is not called upon to oppose. There is no form of good which the saloon does not oppose, and there is no form of evil which the saloon does not promote. Joy and peace and hope follow the work of the Church; sorrow and strife and despair follow the work of the saloon.

The Church, when it is true to its mission, does good, and only good. The saloon, always true to its mission, does harm, and only harm. In all the history of this town there has never been a good that has come from the saloon. In all the history of this town the saloon has been the chief cause and promoter of every other evil the town has known. I make this assertion deliberately, knowing whereof I speak. I make it to every Christian here present, and I ask—Can you, as a member of the Church of Christ, favor anywhere, or under any circumstances, the institution which is six times represented in this town, and whose work is patent all about us?

CAN A CHRISTIAN VOTE FOR LICENSE?

I would bring our thoughts now from the saloon in general to this particular question: Can a Christian vote, or use his influence for license in this town, and yet be true to Christ and his church membership? If he can, on what grounds does he settle with God and his conscience? We all agree that the saloon is evil, and only evil; does harm, and nothing but harm; that it is opposed to God, and that God is opposed to it; that is opposed to the Church, and that the Church must be opposed to it. We all will admit that the church which should declare in favor of the saloon would be unworthy of its name; that a minister who should own a saloon, or preach in its favor, would meet with indignation on every side, and with scorn from the very defenders of the saloon.

I can assert without fear of contradiction, that there is not a man in this town who calls himself a Christian who will say that the saloon is in itself a good thing. I dare assert as well that there is not a saloon-keeper, or a bar-tender, in this town who will maintain that the saloon in itself is a good thing. I dare assert that there is not a man in this town who will maintain that a single one of our six saloons—either of the three in this village, or of the three elsewhere—is in itself a good institution. I dare assert that every person in this town believes, and will acknowledge, that each one of these saloons does an untold amount of evil. If a church member to-day defends the saloon as a good thing in itself, it proves that he does not know by experience anything about the Christian life, or by observation anything about the saloons.

But in speaking thus I am not bringing your thoughts to the practical problem. No one is voting for license in this town because he believes in the saloon. Other reasons influence the voters to vote "Yes," and I ask, Can a Christian man make any one of them, or all of them combined, his reason for voting, one week from to-morrow, that the saloon shall continue to be licensed in this town in the future?

SOME ARGUMENTS RE-EXAMINED.

Let us re-examine some of these arguments. I say "re-examine," for every one of them has been stated and answered many times within the past few years. I start with the lowest: Can a Christian in this town vote for license on the ground that it will decrease his taxes? It has been proved over and over again that in the long run, year after year, the licensed saloon increases taxes. It has been proved in every town and city where no-license has been tried for a series of years that it is a money-saving matter to the tax-payers. Cambridge has proved it; the Mayor of Fitchburg has announced it for his city, and in other instances without a single exception it has proved true throughout our whole Commonwealth, and throughout our whole country. But whether it decreases taxes or not, can a Christian vote for license for the purpose of make his taxes less? Is saving taxes in itself a sufficient reason for any act? His taxes might seem lighter if he should steal the money with which to pay them, but can a Christian do it? His taxes might be made lighter by concealing his property, and making oath that he did not have it, but can a Christian do it? If he knew that his taxes would be $5 or $100 less because the saloons were doing their work by taking money to pay his taxes from the poor drunkard and his family, and from the man just becoming a drunkard—if, I say, he knew this, could he vote for it with a clear conscience? Would he be worthy of a place in the Church of Jesus Christ, who came to save men from drunkenness and all sin, and gave His life to do it? Judas thought to help himself financially by selling his Master for 30 pieces of silver, but conscience drove him to suicide. The Master's cause in the world is dearer to Him than was His body. Will you sell His cause for a few dollars which you suppose the license fees save you from year to year? If you will, you have no rightful place in this or in any church; you are false to the mission of the Church; you are false to the faith; you are false to Christ and to God.

I turn now to another argument long since worn threadbare, but brought out once more and aired before this community.

"License," it is said, "controls the evil traffic." I ask any man who knows the facts if he thinks it controls the traffic in this town. The past year has in one respect been an exception to all other license years—the last majority for license was only 17. Three years ago men of this town laughed at the idea that the town could be brought again to take a "No-License" stand. They told me personally that it was no use, and that I was throwing away my strength and that others were throwing away their strength in giving it to this work, but the next year the majority was cut in two, and the next year it was brought down to 17, and this year the sentiment is known to be overwhelmingly in favor of no-license, and if fully expressed will show a strong "No" vote. In view of the fast-dwindling majority, and the changing sentiment in the town, there has been a more vigorous effort than ever to control the traffic. Has it been controlled? The question need only be asked, and every man who has kept himself posted on the affairs of the past year will answer in thought, whether he puts in a word or not, emphatically, "No." Has the selling been confined to those who by law were permitted to buy intoxicating drinks? That man who was sold liquors through a long debauch in this town, and who fell in a fit on his way to jail, and who passed day after day through the experience of delirium tremens while in custody, and who longed to escape from his misery by death, who bought his liquors while shaking with the effects of drink, and bought them from three saloons in our town, is one of the answers.

Has the law with reference to Sunday selling been enforced? Does any intelligent man think it has? Why that place to which I could take you—though I have not been there, other eyes have seen it for me—why, I say, that place, fitted up in one of the hotels in this town for Sunday selling? This is one answer.

There are other answers in abundance. I assert, and I assert what the people of this town know to be true, that the liquor traffic has not been controlled the past year; even in this year of unusual attempt, it has not been controlled according to the law, or anywhere near it.

Can a Christian vote for license in order that the traffic may be controlled, with these facts before him?

Again, it is said that a no-license law cannot be enforced, therefore we should vote for license, which is not, and never has been enforced. I know from experience the difficulty of enforcing the no-license law, but I have seen it enforced. I have had a part in enforcing it. I have seen a town where it was said, as it is said here, that no-license could not be enforced without a saloon open or secret in it. I have seen the attempts to establish a secret saloon frustrated by the conviction of every one who attempted it. I have seen it become certain that arrest and conviction would follow every attempt of this kind, and the keeping of secret saloons a practical impossibility.

I do not hope for as complete success immediately in the town of Palmer. But I do say that if this town votes "no-license" this year that there will be an attempt made to enforce the law, vigorous, and in a large measure successful. If this town will vote for "no-license"; if it will make an appropriation for its enforcement, and furnish officers who want to enforce it, who are competent to enforce it, who will try to enforce it, and if the result is not an evident success so that reasonable people will acknowledge it, I pledge myself, if pastor of this church one year from to-day, to preach a sermon in favor of license, and then resign this pastorate and leave this town.

There are earnest, capable men in this town who stand ready to organize for assisting our officers in every possible way, and to hold up to the community incompetence or dishonesty in those officials who fail in doing their duty. No-license has never been tried in this town under such circumstances. Moreover, the present sentiment for no-license is not a matter of a day; it is the result of a long educational process. For months and years this sentiment has been growing, and it is a solid sentiment. When success comes to it in town meeting; when all secondary and personal matters shall be brushed aside, and when the vote shall be a plain "No" vote, this sentiment will be here to back up our officials. It is no spasm that has suddenly come over the town; it is a conviction. It is a conviction that will remain, and will stand back of law enforcement until it is either proved that "no-license" is a glorious success, or a dismal failure.

THE REAL ARGUMENT FOR LICENSE.

Can any Christian man, or any man who is opposed to the saloon in any way, under these circumstances vote for license this year? A man may vote for license because

A SYMPOSIUM ON HERBERT SPENCER.

Current Opinions of High Authority Concerning Him Whom Darwin Called "Our Great Philosopher," and Whose System of Philosophy, According to Prof. John Fiske, "Marks the Highest Point to Which the Progressive Intelligence of Mankind Has Yet Attained."

A prominent professor in one of our great universities recently stated that ninety-nine per cent of all scholars of the present day are believers in the general doctrine of evolution. This being so, evolution is a subject in which every one should be interested, and every one interested in evolution will certainly be interested in any thing pertaining to its first and greatest expositor—Herbert Spencer. The object in presenting the following expressions concerning Spencer's influence and attainments is to correct any erroneous impressions which may prevail regarding him, and call attention to the inestimable debt which the intellectual world owes to his thought.

The statement that Spencer is the real founder of the evolutionary hypothesis and, more than Darwin or any one else, deserving of credit for all the light it throws upon the origin not only of man, but every form of life, not only of all living organism, but every object both physical and psychical which the wide universe presents, will doubtless be to some a surprise; and yet there seems to be abundant proof of its correctness. Prof. Wm. A. Hudson of the Leland Stanford Junior University, in a work published about one year ago, thus elucidates the subject:

"In the common speech of the day the word Darwinism is almost invariably employed as if it were absolutely synonymous with the word evolution. The one is treated as being at all points not only coextensive but cointensive with the other. Two noteworthy results of this indiscrimination are:—First, that Darwin is habitually regarded as the author of the modern doctrine of evolution at large; and secondly, that this doctrine has, ever since the publication of his great work on the Origin of Species, become so intimately bound up with the special views therein contained that by the correctness or incorrectness of those special views the whole theory of evolution is supposed to stand or fall. Now this, to the extent to which, expressly or by implication, it relegates to Mr. Spencer merely the labors of an adapter, enlarger, or popularizer of other men's thoughts, is entirely false and unfounded. Mr. Spencer had worked his own way independently, from a different starting point and through an entirely dissimilar course of investigation, to a conception of evolution as a universal process underlying all phenomena whatsoever, before Darwin had made public his special study of the operation of one of the factors of evolution in the limited sphere of the organic word. A simple comparison of dates will make this point clear. The first edition of the Origin of Species was published in the latter part of 1859, while Spencer's essay on the Development Hypothesis appeared in 1852. In 1855—four years before the advent of Darwin's book—came the first edition of the Principles of Psychology in which the laws of evolution (already conceived as universal) were traced out in their operations in the domain of mind; and this was followed in 1857 by the essay on Progress: Its Law and Cause, which contains a statement of evolution in its chief outlines and an inductive and deductive development of that doctrine in its application to all classes of phenomena." . . . . "If any man is to be looked upon as the progenitor of a doctrine which in common phraseology may be said to have been in the air—a truth of science waiting to be caught—that man is not he who first elucidated one factor of its process in one domain of phenomena—the biological; but rather he who seized upon it as a universal law underlying all the phenomena of creation—in a word it was not Charles Darwin, but Herbert Spencer."

Prof. Hudson further says:

"His teachings and speculations have been, of all men's, the most influential in directing the intellectual movements of the nineteenth century." . . . . . "From first to last Mr. Spencer has shown himself singularly indifferent to the fascinations and allurements of fame." . . . . . "He began his vast work paying but scant heed to the fierce and fiery criticisms by which he was assailed; and now, after so many years of hard struggle and patient effort, his place as a thinker is acknowledged on every hand, he concerns himself as little with the praise which is showered upon him as he formerly did with the blame." . . . . "His work stands to-day, and will we believe continue to stand, as one of the most Samson-like efforts of human genius and power."

Concerning Spencer's system of ethics he says: "The persistent tendency of all evolutionary thought has been to emphasize the sense of the universality of law when this was already present, and to introduce it where it did not exist before. In this way the doctrine of evolution has really contributed more to ethics than to the natural sciences." . . . . . "With the application of evolutionary theories to moral principles came the emphatic assertion that the connection of cause and effect must be taken to hold good in moral no less than in natural science."

Concerning Spencer's attitude toward religion he remarks: "Only the familiar ignorance, carelessness, and perversity of the general religious world can explain the fact that even to-day Mr. Spencer's teachings are frequently denounced as 'materialistic.' It is surprising how often the shortsightedness of the theologians has led them to treat with antagonism men, who, if they only knew it, should be reckoned among the truest friends of religion." . . . . . "Thousands of pulpits from which there never yet issued a syllable about his (Spencer's) positive contributions to thought have rung with denunciatious of his agnosticism. Thousands of general readers who know nothing of the light that he has thrown upon so many of the practical problems and philosophic controversies of the day, have their own pronounced ideas of his doctrine of the unknowable." . . . . "To stigmatize the Synthetic Philosophy as merely iconoclastic is fundamentally to misconceive its whole character and tendency." . . . . . "May we not suppose, looking back over the course of religious evolution in the past and humbly ackowledge the possibility of continued evolution in the future, that mankind may yet reach conceptions of the Absolute Reality as much higher and truer and nobler than the now current conceptions of Deity as these, in their turn, are higher and truer and nobler than the superstitions of the savage." . . . . "If blasphemy there be in the matter, the charge lies, as Mr. Fiske has properly pointed out, at the door of those who seek to maintain the anthropomorphic hypothesis." . . . . "The emotions of each generation, adjusted to the average knowledge of that generation, cannot but receive a rude shock when some new scientific discovery sweeps away the old foundations and thus shatters the ancient bases of religious faith. At such a crisis what is to be done? Nothing, but to accept the new truth in all humility and in the firm faith

WHAT THE TOWN REPORTS SHOW.

Statements by the Various Town Officials Concerning the Year Just Closed.

The annual reports of the town officers are ready for distribution, and with the exception of that of the school committee, will be in the hands of most of the voters before to-morrow night, giving them an opportunity to persue them before election, a chance they have not had before for some years.

The report of the town treasurer shows receipts of $83,775.60, and expenditures of $81,138.29, leaving a balance in the treasury of $2637.21. The claims against the town aggregate $37,775, due the Palmer Savings Bank.

The selectmen announce that it has been their aim to conduct the affairs of the town in an impartial and business-like manner, and to the satisfaction of the citizens of all sections. As there is no fixed compensation for the officers of the town they recommend that a committee be appointed to report at a future town meeting the salary which each official should receive, and that a special appropriation be made for town officers, thus separating it from the contingent fund. Regarding the addition to the cemetery in the depot village, they find on consultation with the citizens that there is such a vast difference of opinion regarding the amount of land which should be taken,—from three to forty acres,—that they request the voters to decide the matter. Regarding their instructions last spring to spend $2000 for permanent highway improvements, they found it impossible to keep the highways in a safe condition for less than $3000, leaving only $1500 for permanent highways, and as during the latter part of the season they were unable to get the stone from the quarries, nothing was done; they recommend the same appropriation as last year,—$4500,—which with the $1500 already on hand they think will give about $3000 for permanent work this year, and this, with that which the state highway commissioners have promised to expend in the town will make a creditable showing. Five of the bridges in the town are in a very poor condition, Burleigh's, the canal bridge and bridge to the Athol depot at Three Rivers, wooden bridge at Bondsville and canal bridge at Thorndike; new iron bridges are recommended at Bondsville and Thorndike at an expense of $1300; in view of the extremely poor condition of the Burleigh bridge it is suggested that a new iron bridge would be the most economical for the town. The sum of $495 has been collected for sewer entrances, but they feel there is money still due the town for entrances made in past years. In their effort to collect the fee from H. P. Holden, which was stopped by a temporary injunction from the court, they hope for an early trial of the case in order to determine the rights of the town. The selectmen acknowledge the question of illegal liquor selling as the most difficult of their various problems, and while endeavoring to be energetic and vigilant, feel that they have not wholly prevented illegal selling; ten search warrants have been served and liquor secured in seven cases; nine cases have been brought against six persons, with a conviction in each case, $475 in fines having been paid to the town and $75 to the county, while two of the most persistent offenders the town has ever had to deal with have permanently left the place. The summary of their expenditures follows:

	Appropriation.	Expended
Contingencies,	$5000	$4804.42
Highways,	4500	3019.16
Bridges,	1000	927.00

Electric Lights,	5000	5000.00
New Hose,	300	180.00
Board of Health,	200	171.13

In addition to the money in the treasury there is $1176.30 due the town from various sources.

The selectmen make the following recommendations:

Contingencies,	$3500
Railways,	200
Highways,	6000
Bridges,	1500
Sewers and Culverts,	400

The tax collector has paid the treasurer $44,500, leaving $1576.25 to be collected and $358.07 to be abated. The report of the overseers of the poor has already been given in these columns. Their account shows a net balance of $196.15. They recommend an appropriation of $6000 for the coming year, with $500 for the contingent fund. The expenses last year were $6752 62.

By reason of the increased appropriation last year the public library has received a much larger accession of new books than ever before, 307 volumes having been purchased; the total number is now 4371. That the new books are appreciated is shown by the decided impetus given to the circulation after they were placed upon the shelves. The number drawn in February was 1540, against 1017 in the same month last year. On the 29th of February 111 books were drawn, the largest number ever taken in one day. The receipts for the year were $1133.51, and the expenses $1080.78.

The board of health announces 92 cases of contagious diseases reported, with some that were evidently not made known. They state that the mortality of the town is large, especially among children. It is regretted that so many tenement houses are crowded and that public sewers exist in so many places. The indiscriminate use of school books by the children is touched upon as a possible means of spreading contagious diseases. The board announces that in the spring all persons who can and have not entered the sewers of the town will receive a legal notice to do so. An appropriation of $200 is asked for.

The school committee is confirmed in its belief that when the town voted to employ the services of a superintendent it did wisely. The only change made in the course of studies during the year has been the introduction of drawing, as required by law. The rule insisting on payment for tuition of children from other towns has been enforced, and quite a sum has been received from this source. While the school committee can receive no pay for its services, the town is asked to authorize the reimbursement of actual traveling expenses incurred by the Bondsville, Thorndike and Three Rivers members of the committee in the performance of their duty; no additional appropriation will be necessary for this. The new school building at Thorndike is expected to be ready for occupancy about May 1st. Were it not for the expense which the town has been to in the erection of this building a new schoolhouse at Three Rivers would be recommended, as the state inspector has ordered repairs on the present building which will cost about $800. The state inspector has ordered "Better and additional means of ventilation" in the grammar school building in the Depot village, "that further and different sanitary provisions and means of ventilation than those now provided are required in said building in order to conform to the provisions of Chapter 508, 1894." As this notice was dated February 21st, the committee had not time to obtain estimates of the cost of these improvements, and so leaves the whole matter to the consideration of the voters. The remaining school buildings will require no special expenditures. The graded system has now become established in the main schools of all the villages, and the good effect is becoming more and more apparent. While the work in all the lower schools is very satisfactory, the committee is not thoroughly satisfied with the course of studies in the high school, which has heretofore been mainly a preparatory school for college. In view of the fact that 50 per cent, and probably 80 per cent, of the children end their school life with the high school, the committee suggests that it is more in accordance with justice to pay attention rather to the 80 per cent than to the possible 20 per cent who prepare for college, and announces the intention of endeavoring to make during the coming year some change in accord with the above idea, so that when a pupil graduates from the high school he will be a little better equipped for a business life than was hitherto possible. This matter is more fully touched upon by the report of the superintendent, which is well worth reading. The committee states that it "has no particular fad to carry out, no axes to grind; it has managed the schools of Palmer and will continue to manage them, so long as the charge is intrusted to it, according to its best judgment; believing firmly that the public schools supported by the money of all the people are for the benefit of all the people, there will be in them no distinction of religion, race or color; in the employment of teachers we have only one rule—to get the best; in the treatment of the children there must be no favoritism, no partiality; by such methods we feel convinced we shall best carry out your wishes and make the public schools of Palmer what you would like to see them."

The same appropriation as last year, $20,000, is recommended.

The financial statement of the committee follows:

	Receipts.	Expenditures.
Teachers' salaries,	$13,000.00	$12,518.92

Democratic Caucus Nominations.

The Democrats held their caucus at the town house last Friday night, a special train carrying the voters from this village and Thorndike. T. W. Kenefick was chairman and F. D Barton secretary. The following ticket was nominated with little or no opposition: Selectmen, J. F. Twiss, G. M. Atkins and C. T. Brainerd; assessors, G. W. Lyman, A. A. Warriner and H. T. Bishop; overseer of the poor for three years, William Merriam; school committee for three years, C. H. Hobbs and W. A. Breckenridge; for two years, L. E. Chandler; town clerk and treasurer, F. D. Barton; board of health for three years, Dr. William Holbrok; for two years, Dr. H. A. Smith; for one year, Dr. L. H. Hendee; tax collector, H. A. Northrop; auditors, C. K. Gamwell and S. H. Hellyar; constables, Samuel Brown, J. J. Manning, Michael Colling, J. F. Luman and H. A. Northrop; fence viewers, Dennis Mahoney, Samuel Brown and J. K. Knox.

The Town Reports.

The annual reports of the selectmen and other officers of the town,—with the exception of the school committee, which is in a separate volume,—are printed and ready for inspection. In order that the voters may have an opportunity for looking them over before the town meeting next Monday, the selectmen have taken a new method of distributing them. A copy has been mailed to each voter in the precinct in which he votes. Quite a number of the voters vote in one precinct but get their mail in another; all these need to do to get their town report will be to call at the post office in their voting precinct.

The body of Augustus Couch of New York was sent to Palmer one day last week by express, addressed to J. S. Knox. The charges were not paid, and Mr. Knox naturally declined to advance the money, so the body remained in the charge of the express company two days before the matter was finally straightened out and the body placed in the tomb.

There was a slight blizzard on Wednesday, the anniversary of the great blizzard of eight years ago, and for a time it looked as if that famous storm might be duplicated, but the elements calmed down after a while and it stopped snowing about 8 in the evening, only three or four inches having fallen; there was enough to make sleighs slip pretty well yesterday, however.

The ladies of the Lend-a-hand club of the Congregational church did not have a very large attendance at the chafing dish supper, Wednesday evening, owing to the storm. They served an excellent supper, however, and afterwards presented Howells' farce, the "Mouse-trap," in a very creditable manner. On account of the storm there have been numerous requests to have the whole repeated.

There will be a grand mass meeting and no-license rally in the opera house next Sunday evening at 7 o'clock.. Mr. W. N. Tenney, the well-known blackboard artist and crayon lecturer of Lynn, will give his chalk-talk lecture on "The two methods: License or no-license, which?" A new departure will be made next Monday, when precinct voting will be used in the annual town election for the first time. The polls will be open at 6 30 in the morning, and may be closed at 3 in the afternoon. The precinct officers appointed for the election last fall hold for a year, so no new ones have been appointed for next week's election. The precint voting will do away with the committee of fifteen, and the meeting for making appropriations is called for the 30th.

There is about $90 in the treasury.

In the mountains of East Tennessee there lies a romantic glen known as Coon Hollow. Several years ago the bursting of a dam in the mountains made this quaint place the scene of an inundation of almost the dimensions of the Johnstown horror, but not attended with the fatalities. The place is a rural one, and it is amid these scenes that the incidents of Charles E. Callahan's new comedy drama, "A Romance of Coon Hollow," are laid. The story told is a pretty one, dealing with incidents in the lives of typical Southerners, and the characters are neatly sketched with all of those felicitous little touches that make "Blue Jeans" famous. The strength of "Coon Hollow" lies in its humanity. Georgia, the roadside violet, and Clyde Harrod, the mountain thistle, are people one often meets in a day's travel in that part of the country, while all of the other characters are flesh and blood beings. The bursting of the dam in this out-of-the-way place forms one of the principal scenic effects in the modest play. It is a scene that is realistic. A cotton compress at work gives a sensational effect, and the acme of stage realism is reached in the race between the steamboats Robert E. Lee and Natchez, on the Mississippi river. A unique electrical effect makes one of the scenes particularly strong. Besides a complete metropolitan company, "Coon Hollow" carries two quartets and a troupe of male and female colored buck and wing dancers. The company will appear in Palmer Thursday evening, March 26th.

District Court.

In the district court on Monday Harris Feingold, an itinerent Worcester peddler arrested last week for peddling without license, showed a state license dated the day after his arrest, for which he had applied previous to his arrest, which was taken into consideration and a fine of only $5 imposed, which was paid. The cases of Elias and Joseph Witkin of Springfield for peddling were further continued until to-morrow.

Everett Newport was charged with the larceny of part of a barrel of flour from W. N. Flynt & Sons of Monson, was found guilty and bound over to the higher court in default of $400 bail. Newport complained bitterly that he was never able to obtain justice in the court here, that he always had it "given to him" whether he had done anything or not. In this case there was little doubt, however. When the officer searched Newport's house he found him and Belle Pierce occupying the place alone, and both were held in $300 bonds for adultery.

Joseph Borin paid $15 for drunkenness, and Weadystaro Wewiovski paid $15.

A civil case, H. C. Strong of Palmer against A. E. Ayer of Worcester, was tried Tuesday. Mr. Strong claimed rent for an office in his building which was occupied from November to June, but which he claimed was leased for a year. It was shown that the room was hired and occupied by persons other than the defendant, and he was discharged.

A Word in Favor of License.

Editor of the Journal:— In all that has been spoken and written in favor of no-license recently there seems to be little that is new. Old arguments have been restated and plenty of theories and promises have been advanced. The facts are that no-license has been a failure in Palmer and in the larger towns in this part of the state. The voters realize this, and as a consequence our neighboring cities and towns—Springfield, Holyoke, Northampton, Chicopee, Easthampton, Westfield, Athol, Orange, Shelburne and Belchertown—have just voted license by pronounced majorities. In Shelburne the Congregational clergyman had the courage of his convictions and advocated the voting of license in open town meeting. In Palmer the license policy has made taxes much lower and has advanced both the moral and financial interests of the town. During the past year we all know that good order has prevailed, and that illegal selling has been practically suppressed. Not a cent of the $600 appropriated for suppressing illegal sales has been used, and money received from fines has paid all expenses of prosecution and $340 besides. This makes a balance in the town treasury of $940 on hand, if Palmer should vote no-license, for someone to waste. TAX PAYER.

TRUE TEMPERANCE.

The Difference Between Temperance and Prohibition.

Editor of the Journal:—Will you give the following sermon, preached last December by Rev. J. C. Tebbetts of North Adams, and printed in the North Adams Transcript of Dec. 16, a place in your columns as expressing the sentiment of many who vote for license in Palmer? A VOTER.

At St. John's church last evening Rev. J. C. Tebbetts dealt with the temperance question in a way very different from that generally followed by the pulpit here and elsewhere. His subject was "Temperance, Not Prohibition," and his text was a part of the twenty-fifth verse of the ninth chapter of First Corinthians:

"And every man that striveth for the mastery is temperate in all things."

Perhaps, said Mr. Tebbetts in opening, you were surprised last Sunday to find this, with two other pulpits in town, silent, while four others were speaking in no uncertain sounds on the temperance question. But the delinquent churches, if such you see fit to consider them, do not believe in a sudden outburst on this question just before election. The Roman and Anglican churches are doing much for temperance every day in the year. They take people in their infancy and commit them to God, to temperance and to chastity.

There is great misconception and misuse of the term "Temperance." The moderate man is one who goes not too fast or too far, but not one who does not go at all. The man who is temperate in eating, eats properly, but does not cease to eat. Temperance means moderation in all things and not an absolute law of prohibition, which makes temperance impossible. Prohibition cuts off all occasion for moderation.

Temperance is the higher principle. Prohibition is law and bondage. It puts a man in a straight-jacket and seeks to build a high wall around society. But temperance is liberty, which allows a man's conscience to be his ruler. Prohibition trusts no one. Temperance trusts every one and looks for the conscience to lead to right living without the surrender of one's dignity and responsibility.

There is no other subject which should be more temperately dealt with than that of intemperance. Many so-called temperance people are the most intemperate of all. They will not admit that a man can oppose prohibition and be sincere in his desire for temperance. But I cannot forget the unholy alliance last winter of Prohibitionists and the liquor interests to defeat the Norwegian bill in the Legislature, a bill that was designed to better control the liquor traffic.

Nothing is gained by intemperance in speech in any cause. On the other hand, by such means the good that is sought is lost sight of and antagonism is aroused. "Every man who striveth for the mastery is temperate in all things." But temperance must come naturally; it cannot be brought about by force.

Temperance is necessary to a sound mind in a sound body. And what is best for the individual is best for the family. The head of a family has no right to ruin his health or lessen his responsibility to those dependent upon him. And what is best for the individual and family is best for society. If the sewage is breeding disease or public amusements are corrupting morals there should be immediate correction. And so with intemperance. It should be punished. No one has a right to injure himself, his family or the community. Intemperance is a moral and physical disease. It leads to law breaking, to poverty and to wretchedness.

We all ought to be deeply concerned for the removal of intemperance, but the question is one of methods. How best to control or remove it is the question. And if we cannot remove the evil, how can we best control it? One says "vote for prohibition," but how has this been enforced in most cities and large towns where it has been tried? How was it here some ten years ago? I was not here then, but I am told it was a failure. How was it in Pittsfield for the past two years, and how is it in Adams this year? To vote prohibition is one thing, to enforce it is another. The chief of police tells me that the superior court is more than eighteen months behind in its trials of liquor cases. To enforce no-license we must have the superior court, the local court and an overruling public sentiment behind us. Without these nothing can be done. The law is the will of the people. Has anything been done the past year to create a change of sentiment in this town? If not, I do not see what could be accomplished by voting no-license. To do so and not enforce the law would be worse than nothing, and would set the cause of temperance back ten years. And that is just what would happen if we should vote no-license. We are not ready for it. The courts must be overhauled and strengthened before we can make prohibition effective I would do all in my power for no-license if I thought it could be enforced.

I would suggest that a temperance league be formed for a campaign of education, a campaign that might require five or ten years to complete its work, and when the sentiment of the community reaches a point where no license can be enforced, then let it come.

We do not want the liquor traffic scattered all over the town. It is now well confined and under the eye of the police. It is better to have free rum than rum in ambush. It is the cigar or glass of beer that a boy gets on the sly that he enjoys most, and I believe that so long as we cannot stamp out the liquor traffic we should keep it as open as possible. The sin of legalizing the traffic is not so great as that of scattering it. We all want temperance, but we can get it best in temperance ways. We do not want to put people in the position of slaves and cause them to feel that they have lost their manhood. People can be reached by kindness better than by force. We cannot be short-sighted. We can vote away beer and whisky, but compulsion will not cure the habit. A man is not reformed by making it impossible for him to get drink. In Pittsfield there was a great rush when the bars were re-opened. What had been done to reform those men except to vote "no?"

The temperance question is a great social problem, and all should bear their part in the solution of it.

Tuesday morning about 7.45 o'clock, a large shepard dog belonging to Robert Chambers attempted to cross the Quaboag on the thin ice. When he had reached the middle of the river he found that further progress was uncertain, and sat down on a cake of ice to deliberate, but as the mercury stood at the freezing point he presently stepped out on the drifting ice to continue his journey, and soon was "swimming for it." Homer Shaw, who had been watching the animal, secured a long pole, jumped into a boat, and after a hard struggle of about 45 minutes succeeded in reaching the nearly exhausted and frozen animal and rescuing him. The passage which the boat had made had by this time became filled with heavy drift ice, and only after having been out an hour and a quarter did Mr. Shaw succeed in reaching the shore, feeling much the worse for having stood in four inches of ice water during the entire period.

NEIGHBORHOOD NOTES.

MONSON.

LOCAL NOTICES.

"A Romance of Coon Hollow."
Fine watch repairing at Moore's, Palmer.

How to Beautify the Home.

The third farmers' institute under the auspices of the Eastern Hampden Agricultural society was held in Memorial Hall Tuesday afternoon with a fair attendance. It is rather surprising to Monson people that the Palmer members of the society should have so quickly lost interest in these gatherings, as until this year the principal officers have been from that town; the only paid officer of the society is from there, and he was not present Tuesday; in fact, only two Palmer people were present.

The session was opened by the president, A. D. Norcross, who presented W. M. Tucker, the delegate to the recent meeting of the State Board of Agriculture held at Dalton. Mr. Tucker gave an interesting account of the three-days' session. Mr. Norcross gave a statement of the financial standing of the society, and introduced George M. Whitaker, of the New England Farmer, who gave an admirable address on "Beautiful Homes." The speaker said: Every occupation has its lights and shadows, its drawbacks and advantages. Every person knows all that is hard and disagreeable about his own lot, and only the attractive side of other callings. People in the country look with longing eyes at the city. But a city is a necessary evil, producing the world's supply of clothing and shelter, and distributing the food supply. It gives favored ones opportunities for acquiring wealth, together with educational and social advantages. There is no place like the country for real beauty, and no class have such opportunities for delightful homes as the farmers; much of this beauty may be secured without great outlay by simply attending to little things. Cosiness, neatness, simplicity and home air are essential. Keep things picked up. Have a place for everything. Order is beauty's first law, and when this law is carried out other things will suggest themselves. With slight expense a lawn can be had which will be admired. Professional grass-growers should not allow any one to surpass them in a velvety lawn. Trim up the roadside. Remove fences; a village is much improved by their removal, as it transforms small dooryards into one large public garden. But if the fence is to remain keep it neat, and have it inconspicuous. Picturesqueness is the result of attention to little points. Have flowers, a vine over the door, shrubbery and trees by the roadside. Nothing is prettier than old-fashioned flowers, hollyhocks, sunflowers, dahlias, phlox, larkspur, and petunias. Select the hardy common varieties of shrubs, syringa, snowball, wistaria and lilac. There are no better trees than hemlock, maple, elm, spruce, beech or cedar. Keep the outbuildings in repair; many a decent-looking residence is surrounded by patched-up pig-pens, hen-coops and sheds. The house should receive attention. An elegant building is not necessary, so long as it is neat and in repair. The furnishings need not be expensive. A little money and a little ingenuity will add to the beauties and comforts of the home. The reasons why you should labor for a beautiful home are many: A beautiful home pays if one desires to sell; it is restful; it begets a spirit of contentment; it develops the higher nature; and it is contagious. Labor more for the place of abode. A home should be more than a boarding house. Nature has done her share; help her, and by so doing attain to a higher civilization and become more intelligent and refined.

Stole Flour—The Thief Captured After His Third Visit.

The storehouse of W. N. Flynt & Sons was entered last Saturday night, and half a barrel of flour was stolen. Although the place has been entered before within a few weeks the matter was not made public by the company until this last offense. The first time entrance was made by the south door, the hook fastening it being lifted by a stick from the outside; this time half a barrel of flour was taken, and a line of the white stuff marked the path taken by the thief. The second time entrance was made in the same way but with more difficulty, as a large nail held the hook in place; a half bag of meal was missed this time. On last Sunday as John Leahy was returning from church he noticed that the storehouse door was open, and on investigation found a pile of wheat on the floor and the bag from which it had been emptied missing, together with half a barrel of flour. Suspicion pointed toward Everett Newport, a colored man at North Monson. Officer Studley and an assistant from Palmer called at Newport's and upon examination found a bag of flour in the bottom of which was more or less wheat, and as the bag bore the Flynt mark Newport was arrested and later in the day appeared before the Palmer court. He was found guilty, and in default of bail was sent up to await the May term of the superior court.

J. S. Bogan has sold a house to Carl Davidson.

Mrs. C. H. Bruce, soprano in the Universalist church choir, is recovering from a severe attack of the grippe.

The W. N. Flynt Granite Co. has secured an order for a large quantity of trap rock for the city of Norwich.

Rev. W. H. Marble will preach the fourth Lenten sermon in the Universalist church next Wednesday evening.

Dr. Mary E. Walker was the guest of Mrs. Charles G. Thompson at the Century Hotel the first part of the week.

The Century Hotel Co. is to sell its lower livery stable, and will sell at auction in April all its horses, wagons, etc.

Carl Nordstrom, who has contemplated going into the shoe business out of town, has decided to remain in Monson another year.

Rev. W. H. Marble has been sick with tonsilitis during the past week. His pulpit was supplied Sunday morning by Rev. F. S. Hatch.

Presiding Elder Thorndike of the Springfield district will hold the last quarterly conference in the Methodist church at 6.30 this evening.

It is quite probable that Ingersoll will lecture in Monson in the near future; 100 went to Palmer to hear him last Saturday evening.

Next Sunday in the Universalist church Rev. Mr. Blackford will repeat, by request, a sermon on "The damnation of unbelievers."

Fisk G. Rogers and family have moved to Brattleboro, Vt. Mr. Rogers has charge of the George E. Lyons granite quarry at Dummerston.

Justin Carew, who has been employed by Flynt & Sons in their store for several years, is to leave the firm's employ the first of April and take charge of his farm.

Rev. James Tufts has rented his farm to Mr. Allen of Palmer. Mr. Gould, who conducted the farm last year, will have charge of Mrs. David Andrews's this season.

The lecture by Rev. J. L. Pitner of Norwich, which will be given in Memorial Hall this evening, will draw out a large audience. It is a war lecture entitled, "Boots and Saddles."

Mrs. N. W. Flynt fell on the ice last Saturday and received a severe shaking up, having been confined to her home since. She is improving, however, and her many friends hope to see her out again soon.

Some of the citizens are hoping that an article will be put in warrant to see if the town will vote to have the valuation and tax list published this spring. It is three years since one has been published.

Selectman Norcross attended the hearing before the Legislative committee on highway appropriations in Boston Wednesday. He reports that the indications are that there will be a generous appropriation this year.

A reader writes that "The item in last week's JOURNAL regarding an Equal Rights club has caused much discussion. Will not the correspondent explain herself a little more clearly? Have we a branch of the A. P. A. here?"

Many wagers are up as to when the telephones will be in working order. The agent was here many weeks ago and promised that they should be ready inside of four weeks. The bets are two to one that May will come and go before the instruments are in use.

Darling & Maguire have the contract for building the crushing plant buildings at the "Rock house" for the Flynt Granite Co, and started work this week. The company expects to run the crushers, which are guaranteed to crush 300 tons daily, by an electric dynamo of 60-horse power.

The Windsor club will have a concert and ball Easter Monday night in Memorial Hall. Bird's orchestra of Marlboro will furnish music. Committee of arrangements, Ralph Clifford, Frank L. Shaw, Henry Wentworth, Orrillus P. Holdridge and Stephen H. Newton.

The St. Cecilia dramatic company of St. Patrick's church will present "The Shaughraun" at Memorial Hall next Tuesday evening. Two members of the cast are from Springfield and have played their parts before. The company is being well drilled, and the drama will be well rendered.

Many in town have wondered why it was that Bondsville should be represented here every day by a 'bus load of ladies and gentlemen. It is a mistake. Can it be that the Century Hotel Co. is ashamed of the 'bus, its occupants, or the name of the hotel? for they are the owners of the 'bus which has "Bondsvillage" in bold letters on the sides. It is understood that a local painter has contracted to paint the vehicle in the near future.

A pair of horses attached to an express wagon left Squier's grain mill in a hurry Tuesday afternoon. They did not appear to have any destination in view when they started, but evidently wanted exercise. They ran around William Underwood's house and down Lincoln street to Main. When they reached the corner one seemed to favor a trip down Main, but the other prevailed upon him to cross the street and enter Noble's barn. When they arrived there they seemed quite unconcerned, and were as docile as could be desired. They are owned by Hotel Keeper Royce of Wales. Very little damage was done, though the fence post at Mr. Underwood's droops its head somewhat.

A correspondent writes that "The approaching town meeting is causing but little talk. The old board of selectmen will be reelected, and why should they not be? The town is in excellent condition financially, as in most every other way. Chairman Norcross has just got his hand in, so to speak, as to making good roads, and is also acquainted with the highway commission,—in fact seems to be on more intimate terms with them than the selectmen of any of the neighboring towns. He in all probability will secure a good strip of state highway for Monson next summer. The usual appropriations will be made; Monson people believe in generous appropriations, even during hard times; the more money expended, the more used in town. The town will go for no-license by fully 50 votes. Liquor has been and is sold in town, but no complaint has been made by the selectmen. There is some talk of changing one or two on the board, but it will amount to nothing. The present board is a good safe lot of men; they have worked to good advantage for two years and are getting things into good shape; let well enough alone."

As caucus time approaches there is noticed the usual talk among party leaders to those outside the ring that there will probably be no changes in the present town officers, that there is every indication of harmony, and it is best to let well enough alone, and there is also noticed the usual scurrying about to make every change possible. The name of Representative Charles W. King for selectman will probably be presented for the consideration of the Republican caucus, as well as the names of the two Republicans now serving. It is said that there is some thought of nominating a woman as a member of the school committee. A well-known member of the Democratic party was recently asked who the Democrats were going to nominate for selectmen, and replied, "Are there any Democrats in town? I haven't seen any lately."

The town books, which were closed March 1st, have been audited and the copy will soon be in the hands of the printer. The accounts show these expenditures: Schools, $1163; highways, $4392; out-door poor, $1584; town farm, $844; library, $300; discount on taxes, $1402; sidewalks, $881; lights, $1556; cemeteries, $1194; G. A. R., $100; park avenue road, $200; firemen's service, $94; engine house, $1029; fire department supplies, $1346; town hall, $651; Main street macadam, $818; state highway, $6982; miscellaneous, $2731. The town made a profit of $135.40 on the state highway contract.

Mrs. Daniel Blue met with a serious accident last Saturday morning. While out in the yard she slipped on the ice and dislocated her hip. There was no one at the house at the time, and she lay in the rain about half an hour before assistance came. The doctors do not give much hope for her recovery.

WARREN.

Deputy Sheriff Walter A. Putnam narrowly escaped serious injury last Saturday night while returning home from West Brookfield. The forward axle of the wagon broke, throwing Mr. Putnam out. The horse then started for home and left the remains of the wagon on Main street. Mr. Putnam was considerably bruised and one leg was cut quite badly by the horse.

The annual meeting of the Congregational society was held Monday evening in the chapel. Charles H. Walker was chosen moderator. The treasurer's report showed the expenses of the past year to have been about $2800. A vote was passed to assess the pews for $3250 for the coming year, and the following officers were elected: Clerk, George P. Aborn; treasurer, Joseph G. Hastings; prudential committee, Charles H. Walker, Edward Fairbanks and Frank E. Gleason. It was voted to raise the salary of Rev. Harris G. Hale $100, making it $1500 and the parsonage.

Pastor Installed Over Grace Union Church.

The installation of Rev. Henry B. Mason as pastor of Grace Union church took place at Grace chapel Wednesday afternoon and evening. The following churches were represented in the ecclesiastical council: Hampden, Rev. G. W. Solley, Dr. Ballard; Holliston, Rev. N. Van der Pyl; Indian Orchard, Rev. W. T. Hutchins, W. S. Colwell; Ludlow Union, Rev. G. W. Quick, Dr. J. W. Hannum; Ludlow Center First, E. N. Fisher; Monson, Rev. F. S. Hatch, E. P. Keep; Palmer, Rev. F. E. Jenkins, W. A. Breckenridge; Hope of Springfield, Rev. Ralph W. Brokaw, E. H. Cutler; Three Rivers, Rev. G. S. Butler, J. H. Trickett; Wilbraham, Rev. M. S. Howard, Henry Clark; also Rev. W. R. Newell, principal of Wesleyan Academy, and Rev. L. F. Giroux of the French-American College, Springfield.

The council was called to order by Rev. M. S. Howard of Wilbraham, and Rev. W. F. Hutchins was elected scribe. Rev. R. W. Brokaw was chosen moderator, and opened the session with prayer, followed by the reading of the records of the church and parish by the clerk, M. H. Cooley, relative to the calling of Mr. Mason to be pastor of the church. The credentials of the candidate were read and the council declared same to be satisfactory, and it was voted that the examination proceed, the moderator being instructed to question the candidate, from which it was learned that he was led to put his faith in Christ by regularly attending the services of his home church, which, with special effort put forth in his behalf for his conversion to the Lord Jesus Christ finally led him to give his heart to the Lord, and from that time has endeavored to live a Christian life. His desire to preach the Gospel came from a growth in the Christian life, and after consulting with his pastor he decided to study, for the ministry. He believed that the Bible was an inspired book. While he believed that baptism and the Lord's supper were not saving ordinances, yet thought them necessary in obeying the commandments of the Lord. As to the so-called higher criticism, he could see no good in it.

After a secret session of the council Mr. Mason was notified that the ceremony of installation would take place in the evening.

The ladies of the church served a supper to the visitors, and at 6.45 the installation services began, the programme for the evening being: Anthem, choir; reading of minits of council by the scribe; invocation and Scripture, by Rev. Mr. Butler; hymn; sermon, Rev. F. E. Jenkins; prayer of installation, Rev. M. S. Howard; hymn; charge to the pastor, Rev. F. S. Hatch; right hand of fellowship, Rev. W. T. Hutchins; charge to the people, Rev. Nicholas Van der Pyl; closing prayer, Rev. W. R. Newhall; benediction, Rev. H. B. Mason.

SPRING IS SURELY COMING.

New silks, new dress goods, new wash stuffs, new buttons and trimmings, new gloves, new laces and embroideries are in sight here all round you. The windows have a spring brightness. The air is summer balmness at times. Spring is surely coming.

WARP PRINTED SILKS.

The new warp printed silks have the admiration of all visitors. Wherever did designers catch so well the glory of a summer sunset as to work it so deftly into these loveliest things we've ever seen? Describe 'em! We cannot! You'd think a dark thunder cloud where we meant to convey the goldenest sunlight. But we show them with pleasure.

WASH STUFFS.

The new wash stuffs compel enthusiasm. The very toniest things are the linen batistes and tussors, as sheer and as fine as a cobweb, some of 'em; some with stripes of cotton or silk; some with dots and splotches of silk, all rich and distinguished looking.

French organdie lisse, lovely as a June rose. Look at as much as a hundred different blendings of colors and flowers here; yes, two hundred if you will.

BUTTONS AND TRIMMINGS.

Buttons and trimmings have caught more of the brightness of the coming season than they usually do, and if you look at the brightness of the buttons and trimmings you can catch an idea that the coming season will be brighter than for seasons past.

A SYMPOSIUM ON HERBERT SPENCER.

that the further evolution of thought will presently lead to complete reharmonization of knowledge and feeling—to set our faces resolutely toward the light."

An excellent article on Herbert Spencer with full-page portrait may be found in the December issue of the Review of Reviews. From its many strong expressions of appreciation we take a few sentences.

"It is Mr. Spencer's ideas that have conquered the world; it is his phrases and catch-words that are in everybody's mouth." . . . . "No philosopher has ever been read and quoted so much in his own life time; no philosopher has ever seen his ideas so permeate humanity." . . . .

"If anybody doubts this supremacy of Herbert Spencer among the organizing thinkers and teachers of our time, he has only to think of the numerous phrases which sum up as it were the current thought of the century, and he will find that almost every one of them bears on its very face Mr. Spencer's mint-mark." . . . . "All the formulæ of evolution come straight from his workshop; he is the author, as it were, of the digest of modern concepts." . . . . "No writer employs the English language with greater precision and logical accuracy; no other coins new words of classical origin, wherever they are needed to express his idea, with greater freedom or with greater effectiveness. The dictionary bristles to-day with learned neologisms of Greek descent which we owe to the man who refused to learn the classical languages, and I cannot remember that any one of them sins against the strictest laws of Hellenic word-building." . . . . "Beyond any other man that ever trod this earth, Herbert Spencer, indeed, is the pure type of the philosophic generalizer. It was not detail that attracted him, but the underlying truths and realities of the world; not sleepers and girders, strains and resistances, but the vast secular process of suns, stars, and nebulæ, the endless procession of bird and beast and fish and insect. He must know the Cosmos. That trait is the very keynote of Mr. Spencer's character. He is all pure intellect; and even in the realm of intellect itself he is an engine of generalization!" . . . . "What even the most casual reader can understand in the work, (First Principles) is its astonishing width and depth of Cosmical outlook. We feel at once in approaching it that we stand in the presence of a profound and deeply learned encyclopedic philosopher, whose mind is alert to all the manifold aspects of every problem, metaphysical, physical, biological, psychological, sociological, and ethical. There is no point or field which the treatise does not include in its purview; from the starry heavens to the mind of man, from the unknown and unknowable to the Egyptian hieroglyphics and the Babylonian bas-reliefs, the wings of insects and the leaves of plants. It gives us what it professes to give—a skeleton synthesis of the universe; it sums up in one vast and all-embracing law all the actions of all entities, from atoms to systems, from suns and comets, nebulæ and planets, to the nests of ants and the organization of human communities."

The Outlook, one of the leading religious papers of this country, edited by the well-known Dr. Lyman Abbot, published editorially in its issue of July 6, 1895, the following estimate of the work of that great quartet of scientists of which Spencer is the only surviving member:

"Four men have done more by their unconsciously conbined labors than all other writers together to change the point of view of the thoughtful public and lead towards, if not to, a general acceptance of the evolutionary hypothesis of life. These four are Darwin, Tyndall, Huxley and Spencer. Nor can we expect that any other men in our time will win an analogous place in public estimation. The stream of influence which they have contributed will henceforth divide, like the mouth of the river Nile, into many streams, and the enrichment of human thought will be carried on with new applications and with both wider scope and minuter detail, while some vagaries of speculation incidental to the earlier and formative period will be corrected by later students and teachers."

As an educator Mr. Spencer is recognized as one of the highest authorities. His treatise on Education is standard throughout Europe and the Western continent. In fact all his most important works have been translated into the German, the French, the Italian, and the Russian languages, and are used in nearly all the colleges and universities of the civilized world. His thoughts permeate the literature of the age. No less than twelve volumes of the Encyclopædia on Britannica discuss his writings. No work pedagogics, psychology, sociology, or ethics is complete without him. All this, and yet he is a man without titles. He disapproves of them as they are usually either undeserved, or come too late to be of advantage. No institution can now add to the honor of Herbert Spencer, and though, if he would permit, many would gladly honor themselves by conferring their titles upon him, notwithstanding his known attitude and persistent refusals, honors have been offered him by the Royal Academy of Rome, the Royal Academy of Turin, the Royal Society of Naples, the American Philosophical Association, the French Academy, the University of Bologna (the oldest in the Western world), and the present Emperor of Germany.

At the meeting of the National Educational Association in Denver, last July, its president, Nicholas M. Butler, Ph. D. of Columbia University, in the course of his annual address said:

"In our own century two great masters of thought have come forward, offering, like Ariadne of old, to place in our hands the guiding thread that shall lead us through the labyrinth—the German, Hegel, and the Englishman, Herbert Spencer. And as the century closes, amid the din of other and lesser voices, we seem to hear the deeper tones of these two interpreters swelling forth as representative of the best and most earnest endeavors, from two totally different points of view, of our human seekers after light. Each has taken the whole of knowledge for his province, each has spread out before us a connected view of man and his environment, and each would

. . . . . assert Eternal Providence,
And justify the ways of God to men.

These great teachers typify the catholicity and the scientific method that are so characteristic of the best expressions of our modern civilization. Whatever of insight we have gained into history, into philosophy, into art, and into nature, they have incorporated in their systematic thinking, and have endeavored to illuminate with the light of their controlling principles.

Hegel, schooled in the teachings of Kant and Fichte, and coming early to an appreciation of the seed thought of Plato and Aristotle, Bruno and Spinosa, has taught us in unmistakable language that independent, self-active being is the father of all things.

J. W. Pierce, Republic, Ia., says: "I have used One Minute Cough Cure in my family and for myself, with results so entirely satisfactory that I can hardly find words to express myself as to its merits. I will never fail to recommend it to others on every occasion that presents itself." LeGro & Lynde.

Spencer, feeling the thrill of that unity which makes the cosmos one, and receiving from Lamark and Von Baer the hint that led him to see that the life of the individual furnishes the clue to the understanding of the life of the aggregate, whether natural or social, has formulated into a single and irrefutable law of progress the terms of that development, or evolution, which has been more or less dimly before the mind of man since thought began. The German, with his principle of self-activity, and the Englishman, with his law of evolution, offer us a foot-hold for our knowledge and faith, and assure us that it will safely support them. From the one we learn the reasonableness of all that is or can be, while the other teaches us the character of the process by which the visible universe, that every day presents new wonders to our gaze, has been builded out of the primeval star-dust. At their hands the two sublime and awe-inspiring verities of Kant—the starry heavens above and the moral law within—find their places in the life of the spirit, and together testify to its eternity and its beauty."

The greatest men of the present day are interested in evolution and appreciate Spencer. On the 16th of last mouth President Hyde of Bowdoin College preached to the students of Yale, taking for his text Herbert Spencer's definition of life—"The continuous adjustment of internal relations to external relations."

"The fingers of one hand will more than suffice to count all the anti-evolutionists who are competent to have an opinion upon the subject." One of these has since died—Prof. Rice, Wesleyan University.

"As an educated man and an able thinker, Herbert Spencer stands foremost."—Prof. William Sumner, Yale University.

"I think Herbert Spencer is one of our greatest living philosophers, one to whom everybody is immensely indebted."—G. Stanley Hall, president of Clark University.

"The intellectual atmosphere was charged with conceptions of Evolution. Mr. Youmans had arrived at such conceptions in the course of his study of the separate lines of scientific speculation which were now about to be summed up and organized by Herbert Spencer into that system of philosophy which marks the highest point to which the progressive intelligence of mankind has yet attained."—Prof. John Fiske, in "Edward Livingston Youmans: The Man and His Work."

"His bold generalizations are always instructive, and some of them may in the end be established as the profoundests law of the knowable universe."—Dr. McCosh, Late president of Princeton College, in his "Intuitions of Mind."

"Mr. Spencer, clearest of thinkers, . . . has admirably shown the inherent absurdity of the notion to which many cling as if it were a demonstrated truth" (the notion that nebulæ are distant sidereal systems).—Prof. Richard A. Proctor, in "Knowledge."

"The profound and vigorous writings of Mr. Spencer embody the spirit of Descartes in the knowledge of our day, and may be regarded as the 'Principes de Philosophie' of the 19th century."—Encyclopædia Britannica, Article, 'Evolution.'

"One of the most vigorous as well as boldest thinkers that English speculations has yet produced."—John Stuart Mill.

"In his study of psychological phenomena, Mr. Herbert Spencer has employed the fundamental processes of every method,—synthesis and analysis. In our eyes one of the greatest merits of this rare mind is his skill in using these two difficult instruments."—M. Ribot.

"I question whether any scientific works which have appeared since the 'Principia' of Newton are comparable in importance with those of Darwin and Spencer."—Professor Stanley Jevons, Owens College.

"We cannot deny the title of philosopher to such a thinker as Mr. Herbert Spencer, who does genuinely bind together different and hitherto alien subjects of thought by a clear and wide, though neither an all-comprehensive nor a spiritual, hypothesis, the principle of evolution."—Professor St. George Mivart, (Roman Catholic).

"One of the monumental works of our time is the 'Synthetic Philosophy' of Herbert Spencer."—Benjamin Kidd, in his "Social Evolution."

"Herbert Spencer, the greatest intellect of the century!"—Rev. Jenkins L. Jones, Chicago.

"The pre-eminent English philosopher of our time."—Rev. Amory H. Bradford, in his "Heredity and Christian Problems."

"It is to Herbert Spencer more than to any one else that this world owes the greatest word of the 19th century: Unity. This idea—that of unity the 'togetherness' of the Universe—is manifested in all the forward movements of human efforts and thinking. It is the central thought along all lines—the scientific, the philosophical, the ethical, the sociological, the religious. As Independence was the moving word in the 18th century, the idea, the inspiration behind all its revolutions in the interests of humanity, so, and in like manner, Unity has come to be the word, the moving force of the 19th century."—Dr. C. T. Stockwell, author of "Evolution of Immorality," and similar works.

"For the establishment of Evolution as a universal method and the formulation of its law—a work transcending in importance that of Newton, the world is indebted to Mr. Spencer. The physical sciences — thanks to Darwin and the biologists, as well as to Spencer—are already organized on an evolutionary basis, and pushing forward to new discoveries. Psychology, Sociology, and Morals will follow, with results replete with practical benefits to mankind. Religion will grow more reverent and more worshipful as it contemplates the Unsearchable Mystery of creation and life. With the law of Evolution as a clue, science will make more rapid progress during the next century than ever before in the world's history. And coming generations will look up to Herbert Spencer as the greatest of the world's philosophers—great indeed in his mastery of speculative research, but greater in the illuminating power of his teaching upon the practical problems of our daily life."—Dr. Lewis G. Janes, President Brooklyn Ethical Association.

Such testimony might be indefinitely extended, but space forbids. Those, however, who ignore this would not be convinced by more. One thing is sure—the world is turning to the light. Men may close their shutters and stay in the dark, but they cannot stop the sunrise. Law prevails; order prevails; progress prevails; and whoever opposes will find a Sisyphean task. Toward the pillars of every temple of superstition some Samson is grouping. Every veil of pharisaic blindness will rend at the coming of some new Messiah. Spencer's place in the history of the world is secure. Grant Allen, one of England's most popular scientists, thus speaks of his stupendous achievements, and forecasts his enduring fame:

"Deepest and mightiest of our later seers,
Spencer, whose piercing glance descried afar
Down fathomless rifts of dead, unnumbered years
The effulgent waste drift into sun and star,
And through vast wilds of elemental strife
Tracked out the first faint steps of yet unconscious life,—

Thy hand hath led us through the trackless maze,
Chaotic sights and sounds that throng the brain;
Traced every strand along its tangled ways,
And woven anew the many-colored skein;
Linked fact to fact in adamantine laws,
And shown through minds and worlds the unity of cause.

. . . . . .

Not without honor is the prophet's name,
Save with his country and his kin in time;
But after years shall noise abroad thy fame,
Above all other fame in prose or rhyme;
For praise is his who builds for his own age,
But he who builds for time must look to time for wage.

Yet though thy purer spirit scorns to heed
The vulgar guerdon of a brief renown,
Some little meed, at least, some little meed,
Our age may add to thy more lasting crown.
Accept an unknown singer's thanks for light
Cast on the dim abyss that bounds our narrow sight."

Best Spring Medicine.

The Palm Given to Dr. Greene's Nervura.

That Great Jury, the People, Have So Decided.

Grandest Medicine for Blood and Nerves.

Used by Hundreds of Thousands in Spring.

Nervura Indeed the World's Great Spring Medicine.

Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy is indeed "The World's Great Spring Medicine." It has come to be recognized by almost everybody as the best possible spring medicine to take, and hundreds of thousands of our people use it during the trying spring months, to tone up anew the relaxed nerves, and re-invigorate and enrich the blood.

A spring medicine is a necessity if one wishes to keep in perfect health and vigor, during the changes from winter to summer. This grand spring tonic, this perfect spring medicine, Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy, is exactly what the system needs at this season. It not only purifies, but makes rich, red blood; it not only strengthens and invigorates the nervous system, but re-energizes and re-vitalizes the nerves by feeding them with renewed nerve force and power. It is not only an aid to digestion, but it creates a regular, natural and healthful action of the bowels, liver, kidneys, which in the spring are always sluggish and inactive.

In fact, it is just what people need to make them well and keep them well during these months, so threatening to the health of all, and when it is considered that Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy is made entirely from pure, health-giving, vegetable remedies, and that people give it more testimonials of cure than any other remedy on earth, no one can doubt that it is the very best spring remedy for everybody to use.

Mr. Gustave Leibach, of 337 First St., Jersey City, N. J., says:

"I was troubled with sick-headaches, and could not sleep on account of the pains in my head. I was suffering night and day with dyspepsia, could not eat anything, my stomach would sour so. If had to starve myself to have any ease. I had to give up work at last, I was so nervous and miserable, and I was falling away in flesh so that my friends hardly knew me. I tried several remedies, but without avail. At last someone recommended Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy. I tried one bottle and began to improve. I started in to eat all right; then I picked up my health; my headaches disappeared and my weakness and sour stomach went away. I used three bottles, and could sleep all night with ease; I used six bottles, and felt like a new man. I can now do a day's work without any trouble, and I am happy as a bird in spring. I was so miserable, always suffering, always in pain, but now I am like a new man."

Use Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy this spring, for it is the discovery and prescription of a well-known physician, Dr. Greene, of 34 Temple Place, Boston, Mass., who is responsible for its beneficial action, and who can be consulted free of charge, personally or by letter.

THE CHURCH AND TEMPERANCE.

he wants to keep a saloon, or be a bartender, or in hope of having some other position in connection with it, but he cannot do it as a Christian. A man may ignorantly vote for license that his taxes may be decreased, but he cannot do it as a Christian. A man may vote for license because he wants his drinks, and wants places where he can easily obtain them, but he cannot do it as a Christian. A man may vote for license on the ground that license controls, but he cannot do it here in Palmer as an intelligent man, much less as a Christian man. A man may vote for license on the ground that no-license cannot be enforced, but, laying all other considerations aside, can he honestly do it this year in view of all the circumstances?

As I talk with men, and take into account all the circumstances, I have become thoroughly convinced that in most cases the final reason, underneath all stated reasons, for voting license in this town is one or the other of two only. In nine cases out of ten, either the man hopes to make money somehow out of license, or he wants the open saloon where he can get his drinks. This is a calm and candid conclusion after long and careful study of the situation in this town. Remembering what our text holds up as the ideal of the Christian Church, and remembering what our Lord has given the Christian Church to do, can a member of His Church vote for license, or fail to vote for no-license on either of these reasons? Can a Christian place himself alongside of Judas with his money argument, and have the joy and peace of a Christian experience? Can he place himself alongside the drunkard, and walk in his way, and prepare himself for his end, and have a true place in the Christian Church? Every conscience and every intelligence answers distinctly, "No."

AN APPEAL FOR REASON AND GOOD SENSE.

In closing what I have to say this morning I wish to make one appeal Perhaps in all the history of this town there was never a year of more confusion in various lines than there is this year. Questions have come before us on which we have taken various stands, generally, perhaps, with a good conscience. I believe one thing; my neighbor believes another. I am of one Church; my neighbor is of another. I am of this organization; my neighbor is of that. I am of one party, my neighbor is of another. I believe in a line of action which has been taken politically, while my neighbor believes in the opposite. The men who favor the saloon are taking advantage of this fact and are seeking to make every one of these issues bear upon the license qustion. They would have every man who feels that he has been injured by some one else in town show his resentment of that injury in only one way—by voting for license. It is certain that a license vote, if successful, will indeed harm my neighbor, will harm his Church, will harm his organization, for a license vote will harm everybody; but is it either a Christian, or a reasonable method of showing resentment, or taking revenge? Will it help my cause, my organization, my Church, to fasten the fangs of the saloon in the vitals of the town? Will it correct a wrong my neighbor has done me to injure him and myself with every man, woman and child in Palmer.

I count upon the good sense of our citizens of every Church. I cannot believe that they will be led by designing men, or by any personal feeling to commit such folly. I believe that the sentiment of this town—which I am positive is strongly for "no-license"—will express itself at our coming town meeting; that all will rise above personalities, and resentments, and every other thing which would lead them to wrong action, and vote their honest convictions, and that, as a result, from the first day of next May we shall enter in this town upon the no-license policy, and that the outcome will be so marked for good, so evident to our whole citizenship that this shall be the policy of all the future of this town. When the results of ten years shall be noted, as they have been recently noted in the city of Cambridge, I believe that Palmer will roll up a majority in the eleventh no-license victory which shall correspond in its proportions to that magnificent majority which the now famous City of Temperance rolled up at its last election.

I plead with every Christian man to use his influence to the utmost. I plead with every Christian woman to use her influence to the utmost. I plead with all the Christian young people to use their influence to the utmost. I plead with every Christian voter to be true to his God, to his Church, to his town and to his conscience. If every man, woman and child even, is thus true, that for which so many of us have labored and prayed will be attained. The churches of this town will enter upon a new era. The business of this town will take a new start. The growth of this town will feel the happy effects. The name of this town will be baptized and sent forth a new name to redeem the old reputation, and to make it known that a town, beautiful in situation, with an atmosphere unsurpassed in good old New England, with advantages such as few country towns have, has now become one in which families can be reared in safety, sons trained without the allurements of the saloon, and where a social life filled with the pure and sweet spirit of Christ holds undisputed sway.

May the eyes of every good man be open to the facts. May his reason and his conscience be permitted to act, and may his vote be such as he can ask the blessing of God upon.

When this becomes true in all our town, this question which has been so long agitated will be forever settled. Remember, fellow Christians, that "ye are a chosen generation, a royal priesthood, an holy nation, a peculiar people; that ye should show forth the praises of him who hath called you out of darkness into his marvellous light."

"See here, papa," said Willie, "do you remember how badly you felt because I sent you a comic valentine last year?"

"Yes. What of it?"

"Well, if you want a nice one this year you'll have to double my allowance. I can't afford more'n a cent on five cents a week."—Harper's Round Table.

RISKED HIS LIFE FOR HIS MATE.

The life of the telegraph lineman is full of peril. As a rule the workman has served an apprenticeship to his arduous occupation or has previously qualified as a sailor. It is no easy matter to climb hand-over-hand the huge telegraph poles the sight of which is so familiar all over the country.

In stormy weather the workman carries his life in his hand. A few years ago a shocking accident drew attention to the dangerous nature of the work. Two men were engaged on a telegraph pole standing many feet above a well-known line of railway. A wire had broken and they were busy repairing the damage.

The wind blew fiercely from the east, and the pole rocked to and fro in the blast. Suddenly a strong gust caused one of the men to turn in his position. In doing so he somehow pushed his companion, who, taken unawares, fell backward. He clutched at his mate and both tumbled over among the wires.

For a moment the two men hung without speaking a word. Then one of them said:—

"Bill, I can't reach the post and I'm afraid if I move the wires will break." And as he spoke a wire broke.

"Well, mate, it's a big drop down into the grass," replied the other man, "but as you're married and got three kids I don't see why I should stay here."

"No, don't do that, Bill; you'll get killed, surely. Let's hang a little longer."

But another wire broke and Bill made up his mind.

"Good-by, mate," he said to the other, who had tears in his eyes; "good-by."

Then he dropped, a fall of 40 feet. He fell among some bushes and rolled down the embankment. When he rose (for he was not dead) he crawled up to where his companion hung.

"I'm all right, mate; I'm going for help."

The station was half a mile distant. When the poor fellow who had risked his life for his mate told his tale he fainted away. The doctor said he had broken his arms and a couple of ribs; but his noble action saved his friend's life and his own.—Pearson's Weekly.

WRITTEN FOR THE PALMER JOURNAL.
From Glencore Hill.

At Glencove Hill—ere you alight
From the jaunting car, machree,
Look straight ahead,—for a drearier sight
On earth you couldn't see.
The bogs in flood, the bare mossbanks,
The cabins barer still:—
Jump down, if you can, and shake your shanks
When you come to Glencore Hill.

In other lands I long have dwelt;
Have returned occasionally
To my native heath,—but what I've felt—
To describe it—it's not in me;
When nearing my journey's end I've sat
On a car with Tom or Bill,
And all to myself had a long look at
That scene from Glencore Hill.

I knew what the end of the world was like,
When I was a little child;
On boards and barricades, ditch and dyke
I have often looked, and smiled;
But this wilderness, on a winter day,
With nothing the void to fill,
Is enough to turn a man of clay
Away from Glencore Hill.

The shoddy tourist—a shyster—shuns
The sheughs where the redshanks roam;
But 'tis through this loch the rampart runs
That leads to my childhood's home!
Beyond these bogs I've always had
A welcome, and always will;
And the thought of this still makes me glad
When I come to Glencore Hill.

MOSES TEGGERT.

Springfield, Mass., March, 1896.

A MYSTERIOUS SOCIETY.

It was a dreary, raw, March day, and a slow, steady rain was falling. A cold east wind was asweep, shrieking, moaning, and sighing as it went through the streets and alleys, rising and falling by fitful turns.

Within a cozy room an old man sat gazing vacantly at the fire that burned cheerily in an open grate. His head rested on his hand and his whole attitude was that of deep thoughtfulness. A long time he remained in the same position, only varying the monotony of breathing by giving vent to an occasional sigh.

Then he was suddenly aroused by a timid rap on his door. He listened, and after the lapse of a moment heard the rap repeated. He arose and went to the door and opened it. A small, poorly clothed lad stood before him, shivering with the wet and the cold. They looked at each other a moment in silence, and then the boy spoke with some hesitation, as if undecided whether it were better to speak or not.

"My father is very sick," he began, "and we have no money to buy food and medicine, and—and I don't know what we are going to do."

The old man frowned and his features darkened and hardened, and when he answered his voice was cold and stern.

"Well," he said, "what is that to me?"

"My father is your son," the boy replied, gaining a little courage as he proceeded, "and you surely"—

"No, he ain't my son," the old man interrupted. "I told him years ago that he was no longer anything to me, and that I would never again have anything to do with him."

"But, grandfather, he is sick," the boy urged.

"What is that to me? Am I responsible for his sickness? Is it my business that he is in want? Why do you come to me for help, eh? Why don't you go to other people?"

"Because other people are nothing to us and you are."

"I'm not, I tell you. I said I'd never have anything to do with Rafe Andrews and I kept my word. He's not my son and he's nothing to me, and I don't want him to send you here again."

"He didn't send me."

"He didn't? Who did, then?"

"My mother."

"Oh, your mother, eh?"

"Yes, sir, but she sent me on my father's account, and she wouldn't have sent me on her own for the world. Father tried to keep her from sending, and told her it wouldn't do any good, but she said she felt sure you would aid him if you knew he was sick, because she could not believe that you were unfeeling."

"She said that, did she?"

"Yes, sir, and I persuaded father to let me come, and I told him I wasn't afraid of you, because you are my grandfather."

"But I ain't your grandfather; I tell you I ain't anything to any of you."

The old man's voice was still cold and harsh, but there was a trace of softened light on his face, though he continued to frown and glower.

"We may not be anything to you," the boy said, "but you are something to us. In spite of all you can say and do you are my father's father and my grandfather, and we can like you even if you don't want us to. But we don't want any help from you now, because father wouldn't have it after you have said what you have. Good-bye."

George Andrews turned and walked out of the house with the dignity of a man. His grandfather, surprised at his abrupt departure, stood looking after him as he trudged down the street through the rain. Two or three times the old man was on the point of calling him back, but, shutting his lips tight together, remained silent.

When the boy had turned a corner and disappeared from view, the old man closed the door and returned to his seat before the fire. A long while he sat there in his favorite thoughtful attitude, while his mind drifted back from one event to another until he reached the time when his son had been a boy so much like the lad who had just left him.

"Poor Rafe!" he murmured. "Sick and in want and they thought I would help him. She thought I could not be unfeeling, and she has the least reason of anybody in the world for thinking so. Poor woman! Poor Rafe and poor children! I wish I could aid them. But I can't without breaking my word and showing them my weakness.

"I must be firm with them and do what I said I would do. Yet I wish—I almost wish I could recall my words. That is a fine, manly boy and he said they liked me. Yes, I wish I could aid them, but I must be firm. They would laugh at me if I were not."

The old man relapsed into silence, but somehow the snug, warm room had lost its air of comfort, and the fire, though it burned brightly in the grate, was no longer cheery. An hour or more passed and then he arose and paced the floor restlessly for several minutes. After awhile, however, he came to a sudden halt and his face lighted up and something very like a smile came to his lips.

"I have it," he said, speaking to himself. "It is the very thing, and I will do it."

The light on his face broadened and deepened, and he not only smiled, but softly chuckled to himself as he hurriedly donned his topcoat and hat and prepared to go out.

"I'll do it," he repeated, "and they'll never suspect the truth."

He went out of the house quietly, that no one might know of his going, and turning down the street walked briskly toward the business part of the town. He took no notice of the rain and the wind, and seemed perfectly unconscious of the fact that it was cold and disagreeable. He met two or three acquaintances on the street and he wondered why they stared at him in surprise, not aware himself that a marked change had come over him within the last hour and that his features had lost their sternness.

"They'll never suspect the truth," he murmured again, with a soft laugh, as he turned out of the street and up a flight of steps leading to a doctor's office.

The world without, with its rain and its raw east wind, was not more desolate and sad than the home of Rafe Andrews that day. George had returned and reported the outcome of his interview with his grandfather, and it seemed to Mrs. Andrews that the last hope of assistance was gone.

There was no money to pay doctors or to buy medicines for the husband and father, and there was a very little food and fuel for the family. It was a distressing prospect, and it was no wonder Mrs. Andrews wept bitter tears as she sat before the wretched fire, shivering with cold and thinking over their situation.

"Oh, how can any father be so heartless!" she moaned aloud. "How can he be so unmindful of the sufferings of his children's children.

"Don't be disappointed by my father's conduct, Mary," Rafe said, weakly. "I never expected anything from him, for he said when I married you that he'd never have aught to do with me again, and he's a man who keeps his word."

"And it's all on my account that you must suffer," Mrs. Andrews sobbed.

"And if it is, Mary," Rafe replied, "on the same account I'd suffer ten times as much if it was required of me. You have been a too dear, good wife for me to regret anything from my father, for nothing but disappointment could come of it. I am very sorry you sent."

"Yes, I should not have done it," Mary confessed, "but you need medicine and proper food so much I thought—I hoped that he would be touched by your condition. It was all I could do and it seemed to me I must send."

"Heaven alone knows what we shall do," Rafe said, after a long pause. "We haven't a friend on earth to whom we can apply for aid, and we can hope for nothing from any source. We are—"

There was a sudden energetic knocking at the door that cut Rafe's speech short, and a moment later a fleshy, bright-faced, jovial-looking old man entered the room, bowing and smiling and seemingly bubbling over with generous good humor.

"I am Dr. Brown," he said, by way of introduction, "and I came in to see Mr. Andrews professionally. A—a certain secret society, which feels an interest in Mr. Andrews, sent me here and instructed me to spare no pains in his behalf."

"But I—I have no means of paying you," Rafe said, after recovering a little from the surprise the doctor's words caused him.

"That is provided for, my dear sir," the doctor replied. "The society has attended to my fee, and also sent money to purchase medicines and other necessaries. There is $50 that I was instructed to hand you for present use. More will be furnished as it is needed."

"Doctor," Rafe said, "I don't understand this matter. I belong to no secret society, and I cannot understand why all this interest should be taken in me and mine."

"I am under the impression, sir," the doctor answered, "that it all comes of your family connection. Some near relation of yours belongs to this society, I think—your wife's father, perhaps, or probably your own father. But," with a wave of the hand, "all that is not to the point. My business here is professional." Rafe Andrews hesitated to accept the generous assistance thus offered him, feeling that he had no right to avail himself of the bounty of strangers. But the old doctor was so kind and persuasive in his assurances to the contrary, that he finally succeeded in overruling every objection, and had the satisfaction of having his services and the money accepted.

Shortly after the doctor had departed, promising to call again on the morrow, a wagon drove, up loaded with groceries; and Mrs. Andrews was too surprised to say anything when the driver brought the articles and informed her they were for her. Finally, however, as the driver was going away she managed to call after him and ask who sent the things.

"I don't know, ma'am," he replied. "The grocer told me to bring them and I supposed you had ordered them."

"But we didn't order them, and you must have made a mistake in the place they were to be delivered."

"No, ma'am, there is no mistake. I was to bring them to Rafe Andrews."

The driver jumped into his wagon without waiting for more words and drove off. Mrs. Andrews stood looking after him in astonishment, when another wagon drove up and stopped, and the driver of it startled her by saying:—

"Where shall I put your coal, ma'am?"

"Coal?" she echoed.

"Yes, ma'am. This is where Rafe Andrews lives, ain't it?"

"Yes, but we ordered no coal."

"That is all right, ma'am. Somebody else ordered it for you, a secret society, I think."

And without more ado the man dumped the coal off and drove away.

There never was an organization more constant and generous in its attentions to the poor and needy than was this secret society in its attention to Rafe Andrews and his family. There was never a day but it sent a delivery wagon with goods, and it seemed to make it its business to scour the town in quest of everything the market afforded. And time and again it sent money by Dr. Brown, until the Andrews not only had all they needed, but several dollars saved up.

"It is truly a wonderful society," Mrs. Andrews remarked, "and its members, undoubtedly, are the best of man. I never believed such generous, liberal people lived."

"Nor I," agreed Rafe. "It doesn't seem possible that strangers should take such an interest in our welfare, when my own father takes no interest at all. I don't understand how it comes about, but if all benevolent secret societies are like this, I say God bless and prosper them."

"This is a society I never heard of before," Mary said. "Dr. Brown said it was called the 'P. B. A.,' which he thought meant Paternal Benevolent Association."

"Yes, it's something new to me, too," Rafe replied, "but it's name fits it to perfection."

Just then Dr. Brown came in, and after he had congratulated Rafe on his rapid recovery, and they had all talked awhile, Mrs. Andrews said:—

"Doctor, we are very much interested in this society of yours, and we wish to know more about it—who its members are and when and where originated, and so on."

Dr. Brown eyed his questioner curiously and half suspiciously for a moment, then breaking into a laugh said:—

"My dear madam, I can reveal no secrets that I am pledged to preserve. The membership and working of the organization are as secret as its passwords and signs. I can positively tell you nothing."

So the mystery of the wonderful secret society remained a mystery, and, so far as Rafe Andrews and his wife could see, it promised to continue so. Nobody save Dr. Brown could enlighten them, and it was perfectly apparent that he would say nothing.

A week or so passed, and one day George Andrews, in passing through the town, saw his grandfather walking down the street from the opposite direction. The old man had his eyes fixed on the pavement and did not see George, though they were quite close together.

A few steps further on George stopped at a store window, and while he was looking in his grandfather came up. At the same moment Dr. Brown came out of the store and the two old men met. Neither of them took any notice of the boy, and neither of them dreamed that he was so near. But George was an interested listener to their conversation from the moment they shook hands.

"Well, how is Rafe?" he heard his grandfather ask almost the first thing he said.

"He is almost well," the doctor answered. "He couldn't possibly do better than he is doing."

"Good," the old man cried, rubbing his hands. "Good, indeed. And now how are Mary and the children, doctor?"

"They're quite well," the doctor replied, with a beaming smile.

"Good again!" the old man cried. "You're sure she's well, are you, doctor?"

"Mrs. Andrews? Oh, yes, indeed."

"That's right. And they have plenty of everything, have they?"

"Yes, they cannot want for anything now, I'm sure."

"You don't happen to think of any little thing that they might need now, do you? It seems that there might be something that they should have."

"I can't think of anything now, Mr. Andrews. It seems that the P. B. A. keeps them well supplied with everything that they can possibly need."

"He, he, he!" the old man laughed. "A great joke, isn't it, doctor, about that secret, society? It's the best thing I ever knew, and I never got as much enjoyment out of anything in my life. It's a rich affair."

"They certainly think so," the doctor said. "They think the P. B. A. a most wonderful organization."

"Do they, though?" the old man cried in eager, trembling tones; "so they appreciate it like that, doctor?"

"Indeed they do."

"But don't they know that I am the society, doctor? They don't know that I am doing it all, do they?"

"Certainly not. You enjoined secrecy on me, you know."

"Yes, it is better that they do not know. They might not be pleased with it if they did, and then, as I told you that rainy day that I came to your office and enlisted you in this plan, I must be firm. I"—

"Grandfather," interrupted a voice, "we are something to you, after all, and you do like my father, don't you?"

The old man started, looked down and saw George, then gasped and turned pale as though he had committed some grave crime and had been detected in it.

"Eh!" he ejaculated. "What does this mean?"

"It means," said the doctor laughing, "that we have betrayed the secrets of the P. B. A., and that society is undone."

"And you were the society, grandfather," George cried, "and you sent all the things."

The old man looked helplessly at the doctor, and the latter, with a shake of his head, said:—

"There is no escape, my old friend. You had as well confess to your guilt and go and make your peace with those you have deceived. You will not find it hard to do the latter."

"No, no," said the old man, "I cannot do that, I must be firm—and—I—they may not forgive and forget."

"They will, grandfather," George cried. "Come home with me. They will be so pleased to have you come, for we all love you."

It is not necessary to say that he went and the past was blotted out by the joy of the present, and that there was no further need of the P. B. A. society, which really meant Peter B. Andrews society, named for its one member.—Chicago News.

SEA-TALE AND COW-TAIL COMBINED.

A lad was found begging in Plymouth, Eng., some years ago, who told a most wonderful tale of woe. According to his statement, given by a straight face and an apparently clear conscience, he had been a cabin boy upon an American steamship. For some misbehavior, as a temporary punishment he was headed up in an empty water cask, and left to reflect upon his wickedness, with only the bunghole of the cask to breathe through. On the following night a terrible storm came up, and the vessel went down with all on board, excepting himself, the cask having rolled over into the sea at the first lurch of the sinking ship. Fortunately for its unhappy occupant, the cask floated with its bunghole free from water, and in the course of a day or so was cast upon the coast, where the lad, after making numerous vain attempts to release himself, settled back to die. Some cows, however, he said, came strolling along the beach, one of them, while switching its tail about, accidentally let the end of it into the bunghole of the cask. The boy immediately seized upon it; the cow, electrified, jumped, stood still, and jumped again, and then rushed bellowing down the beach, the boy hanging on like grim death, and the cask, consequently, bumping the hind legs of the frightened bovine as she fled. Finally, as the boy had hoped, the hoops of the cask were loosened, and striking upon a rock, the whole thing was shattered, and the boy, letting go of the cow's tail, found himself free once more. After wandering about for several days he hailed a vessel, and was carried to Plymouth, where his wonderful experience first became common talk.

BEATS JULES VERNE ALL HOLLOW.—"My watch had dropped into the sea. We were in Greenland at the time. I dived and recovered my watch, but the ice had closed up again. Impossible to get through; to go round would have taken too long. * * * I shouted with the voice of a centaur, 'Throw me a saw!' They threw me one. I sawed my way through the ice, but the sawdust dropped into my eyes."—Figaro.

EDITED BY MISS F. V. DOANE.

Readers of this column who have items or recipes which they think might interest others are invited to send them for publication.

The JOURNAL proposes to make this a permanent feature, and of greater value than ever before. The articles will be short, on subjects relating to the home: Furnishings, cookery, dress, and the like. Subjects requiring treatment at any length will be given in serials from week to week, so that each week's column will contain a variety of subjects.

See the heading of this column! The editor means it! Send recipes of your own, and recipes will be published for the asking. Anything that interests you will interest us. This is the column of the women subscribers and readers of the JOURNAL. You are invited to make it yours, to give ideas as well as to get them. F. V. D.

Cookery.

What to eat is the problem of March, the most trying time to suit the appetites. Now is the time for the cook to exercise her ingenuity. Spices and flavors may be used to advantage.

Roast pork, with dressing made by the following recipe:

Dressing.—One quart dried bread, soak in milk or water till soft. Salt and pepper well, judge of quantity by taste. One egg, about two tablespoonfuls beef drippings, sausage drippings, or butter. Two spoonfuls poultry dressing or one each ground sage and savory. One small onion chopped fine. Mix all well together. Bake in a separate dish or on the pork well up, so that it will not soak the pork drippings. Serve on the platter with the pork.

Try roast beef with Yorkshire pudding. Boil carrots, chop almost fine, pepper, salt and butter. Serve with roast beef.

Baked Beets—have a different flavor from boiled beets. Be sure to cook till soft. Serve with roast beef.

Lettuce—is not expensive. Serve plain, with salad dressing or with chicken salad, it refreshes the eye as will as the "inner man." Serve with ham and eggs.

Parsnips,—boiled, then fried a delicate brown in butter. With veal or beef.

Turnips Creamed.—Cut turnips into cubes about three-fourths of an inch; boil till tender. Make a sauce as follows: Piece of butter size of an egg. Heat in sauce pan and rub into it two tablespoonfuls of flour. Pour over it one pint of hot milk, stirring all the time. Add the turnips. Serve hot, with beef.

Macaroni and Cheese.—Boil macaroni according to directions on package. Serve plain with grated cheese on a separate dish. Also, put boiled macaroni into a pudding dish. Slices of cheese cut very thin laid over it; a dash of pepper, salt to suit your taste, flecks of butter, milk poured in till you can see it rise. Bake in a hot oven till cheese is well toasted. Serve hot. Delicious with any form of meat, especially fowl and veal.

Grind scraps of ham and some ham fat left from frys and boilings, (or chop very fine.) Work into it for every two cupfuls (or according to taste) one-half spoonful each of ground mace, sage and white pepper, a sprinkling of cayenne pepper, a spoonful of ground cloves. Press in a bowl or dish till it can be cut into slices. This is a good relish.

Dressmaking.

How to Make a Dress Skirt.—Until within a few years any woman of good taste, skilled with her needle and having some knowledge of how to put garments together, could buy patterns and do her own dressmaking; and her dresses would be well made and stylish. Now woolen and silk dresses require almost a tailor's skill to give them finish, and each season brings some change in the style that demands change in the making. If you want to make your own dresses it is really better now-a-days to get a dressmaker who "keeps up with the times" to cut and fit for you, and she will tell you how to make and finish.

The skirts of dresses are plain, yet require nearly the skill to make that is necessary to make a coat. For the benefit of those who wish to make their own spring suits I write out directions for making a skirt; I have this from a skilled and stylish modeste.

PATTERNS.—For double width goods get a pattern with seven gores; width of skirt five and a half yards. For silk and other narrow goods get an eight-gore pattern, skirt five yards wide. Get a pattern that cuts one edge of the gore (except front gore and back if there is a back) on lengthwise or selvage edge of goods. Walking skirts are made to swing free from the ground, but a flared skirt should be an inch or more longer than one not flaring, to appear the same length.

LININGS.—Get for lining some one of the stiff materials used. These cost more by the yard than cambric, but are usually wider and more satisfactory.

INTERLINING.—For interlining get hair cloth It costs more at first than any other interlining, but it will out-wear others many times over, and is the only interlining that gives the skirt real style. If it has not been shrunk, shrink it by laying over it a damp cloth and rolling around a stick as tailors shrink full cloth. Haircloth comes in two widths; get firm haircloth the width of the skirt gores. It is now put into skirts from twelve to eighteen inches deep around the bottom, and it will take from two and a third to three and a half yards. It is easy to reckon how much you need if you get the haircloth of the same width as your skirt gores; then if you have seven gores and your haircloth is to be twelve inches deep you would get enough for seven pieces twelve inches deep, or two and one-third yards, etc.

CUTTING.—Cut the lining and outside of the skirt as the pattern directs. Cut the haircloth up into as many pieces as there are gores in the skirt. For instance: Suppose your skirt has a front gore and four gores on either side with a seam in the back, and your haircloth is to be eighteen inches deep; get three and a half yards, cut it into seven strips each one-half yard long; lay a gore of the lining on the table; lay a strip of haircloth on at the bottom with the middle of the gore at the middle of the piece of haircloth; baste the haircloth on to the gore and curve it at the bottom and at the sides to fit the gore. Now take strips left of the lining (or cambric) about two inches wide and baste over the top and bottom raw edges of the haircloth to bind it. Stitch this binding on with the machine, then baste the upper bound edge of the haircloth to the lining gore and stitch.

Baste the gore of dress goods corresponding to this lining gore on so that the haircloth shall be between the outside and lining. Prepare all the other gores the same way and baste together according to the notches. All the gores should now be smooth and even.

FINISH.—Sew the seams according to the notches of the patterns. Press open only the two seams on either side of the front gore. This must be done caref

ANNUAL TOWN ELECTION.

Old Board of Selectmen Handsomely Indorsed—How the Precincts Voted.

The result of the annual town election on Monday showed that a large majority of the voters are perfectly satisfied with the manner in which the business of the town has been conducted in the past, for the old board of selectmen was reelected by a handsome vote. The vote for Mr. Atkins was a great surprise, as it was generally conceded that Mr. Twiss would have the largest number; as it was he was only six behind Mr. Atkins, while there was a difference of only 29 votes between the highest and the lowest on the ticket. The vote which the successful candidates received is thought to be the largest ever cast for selectmen in town. The smallness of the vote cast for Messrs. Fish and Smith for selectmen was somewhat of a surprise, as it was supposed they would give the old board a closer run; they were unfortunate however in being on a ticket which had the support of the so-called patriotic society; the light vote for Mr. Childs is explained by his not having lived in town long enough to become generally acquainted with the voters.

The day was a disagreeable one for the voters, with a snow and wind storm, but teams were started at an early hour in the morning and kept running until the polls closed in the afternoon. The polls were opened at 6.30, and a large number of the voters had expressed their preferences by the middle of the forenoon; in precinct A fully three-quarters of the names on the list had been checked at noon. The precinct voting, which was tried in the town election for the first time this year, was a great factor in getting out the voters, they appreciating the change from the cold, dreary ride to the town house. The vote was the largest ever cast in the town, 1003 of the 1194 voters being out, leaving only 193 stay-at-homes. The names on the lists in the several precincts, and the number voting, is:

Precinct	A	B	C	D
Names on lists,	571	290	193	140
Voted,	491	236	163	114
Stay at homes,	120	54	31	26

The contest between the license and no-license parties was sharp, and every vote which could by any means be gotten in was looked after. The result was a tie vote. Precinct C, Three Rivers, was first in with a no-license majority of 23, Bondsville gave 12 for license and Thorndike 12 for no-license, Palmer gave 23 for license. A recount was petitioned for, and the board of registrars canvassed the vote yesterday afternoon. The original count was found to have been correct, leaving the vote a tie. One ballot in precinct C had been thrown out by the counters however, and there was considerable discussion whether this should be counted or not. Besides the cross which was evidently intended for a vote on the license question, there was only one other mark on the ballot, a vote for constable. An exact reproduction of the ballot as marked is given below. The ballot margin between the rule surrounding the printed matter of the ballot and the edge of the paper was narrow, the same space as shown above, and on this narrow margin, if anything slightly above the sample X inside the rule, the voter had made his X, as shown. This two of the registrars claimed should be counted for license, while two were of the opinion that it should not be counted at all, as it was argued that the intent of the voter could not be determined by the position of the mark.

The reason given why it should be counted for license is that it is nearest the word "yes," and that the voter evidently intended to vote that way. On the other hand there is the possibility that the mark was intended for "no," as it is directly opposite the word "no" in the line giving instruction how to vote on the license question; it might be that the voter, as that was the last word in the line, by reason of defective eyesight or poor light in the booth thought he was voting "no" by placing a mark opposite that word. It is plainly impossible to determine, however, which the mark was intended for, "yes" or "no," and so cannot be counted either way. This will leave the town no license for the coming year, as licenses cannot be granted until the town votes to do so.

It is understood that application will be made to the supreme court to compel the registrars to count the ballot for "yes."

The vote for each officer, by precincts, and the total, is given below:

A Small Fire.

A duty call was rung in just before 2 o'clock Sunday afternoon for a fire in one of Mrs. Maria Lawrence's houses on the west side of Central street, between Pleasant and Park, occupied by Edward B. Sparrow. The fire was in an upper room, and was started by the heat from a coal stove igniting some clothing hung over a chair near it. The flames communicated to a portiere near by, and then to the door casing, running up this to the ceiling and burning a hole through into the space between the ceiling and the roof. There was no opening into this space, and the flames were hard to get at, but they were soon put out. Considerable damage was done by water, which soaked everything and took all the plastering off the rooms. Most of the furniture was gotten out, but much of it was thoroughly soaked. The loss on the building will be about $500, not insured; Mr. Sparrow had $1000 insurance on the furniture. Mrs. Sparrow has been away for some weeks, and Mr. Sparrow was not at home when the fire started.

A horse driven by Edward Slattery ran away Monday near Blanchardville, overturned the carriage and threw the occupants out, one of them, Warren Mundell, being somewhat bruised by striking a fence. The horse became entangled in the harness after running a short distance and stopped. The men were on their way to Palmer to vote, and the horse became frightened by the cars.

Regarding the "Romance of Coon Hollow," which is to appear at the opera house on Thursday evening of next week, the Cincinnati Enquirer said: "If a thing of beauty is a joy forever, Coon Hollow must be just lovely, and it is nightly delighting splendid houses. The scene showing the band of colored boys and girls in songs and dances fairly brings down the house. It differs from the "Pickaninny Band" in "Old Kentucky," and the "Rising Sun Roarers" in "Blue Jeans," and yet is fully the equal of either. Better than this, the play has an interesting and consistent plot, with refined comedy, and the strongly drawn characters have a splendid company to interpret them. The scenic effects are simply magnificent." This play comes to the opera house next week with the gorgeous levee and plantation scenes, in which the Southern negroes and buck and wing dancing is one of the greatest scenes ever shown.

The heaviest snow storm of the winter came Monday, about ten inches of moist snow falling. It packed readily, and there was fine sleighing Tuesday and Wednesday, though the snow was fast disappearing under the rays of the sun and wheels would have been in order again but for another light snowfall yesterday which "greased up" the bare spots. It did not last long, however, for rain commenced to fall early in the forenoon and kept at it all day and far into the night. Yesterday morning there was something like 10 inches of snow on the ground; this morning there were places where there wasn't even the ground. For a time yesterday the snow held the water which fell, but after a while it began to yield up its accumulations, and the streets and gutters everywhere ran water, while the low places were soon transformed into ponds. This morning the river was the highest ever known when free from ice. The water from the Boston and Albany tracks poured down over the Commercial street sidewalk in a flood last night, and by this morning had washed a good-sized gully just below the bridge over the street. A washout was discovered under the track of the New London Northern road just above Three Rivers this morning about 6 o'clock, although a freight had gone over at 4, and it took until 10 o'clock to put it in safe condition for trains.

Regarding Our Collection of Taxes.

Editor of the Journal:—Many of the tax payers of Palmer think it is high time to call a halt on our lavish appropriations for taxes on the people, and especially this year when business depression is over the country and our manufacturers are obliged to reduce their works to half time. We notice forty-two articles in the town warrant to be acted on. Undoubtedly it would be for the interest of the town if half of them were passed over. With no new schoolhouses or bridges built the last year to be taxed for, it is very evident that our tax levy deserves greater consideration than has been given it in the past. We are the banner town for the highest tax rate of any town adjoining us, or any other in Western Massachusetts. Many cities and towns are cutting down appropriations asked for, all around. Tax payers ought to tremble under nearly a nineteen dollar tax rate, against twelve dollars in Springfield. Other towns have splendid water works, electric lights and fire departments, everything else that we have, and a tax rate much less than ours, and continue at a more reasonable rate. The fact is, money is voted away like water for about everything asked for, with little or no regard for the amount asked, or whether a less amount would not be for the best interests of the town and tax payers. The tax collector's office affords the largest revenue of any office in the town with the least labor attached, and should be reformed by selling the collection of taxes to the lowest bidder as heretofore done, or reducing the salary. It now seems to be very unpopular for the tax collector to be seen driving around town after taxes. Three-fourths of the taxes are paid in before September first to save the discount, and taxes which are not paid after notice being sent through the mail are reported as uncollectable and abated by the assessors. A very fat office is the collectorship as now run at $350 a year, and no trouble for delinquent tax payers to escape payments. Is it any wonder that so many want the place, with so little labor to be performed? Will some one inform the tax payers why between $300 and $400 were reported uncollectable and allowed by the assessors last year, if the business had been attended to? Also if any money was collected afterward, how much is ever paid into the treasury? ONE OF THE SUFFERERS.

Death of Mrs. Carlos L. Peck.

Ellen E., wife of Carlos L. Peck, passed from this life Monday morning at 7 o'clock at her High street home. She had been ill for nine days, and her death was due to pneumonia. Mrs. Peck was the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Martin Sedgwick, and was born at South Belchertown in April, 1849, and it was there that her early life was spent. In 1870 she married Carlos L. Peck, who was bookkeeper for Merrick, Fay & Co., straw goods manufacturers, and is now employed at W. N. Flynt & Sons' store in a similar capacity. To them have been born two daughters, Misses Mary and Addie, and three sons, Edward, of the Worcester School of Technology, Rufus and Luther. Mrs. Peck was one in whom many fine traits of womanhood were blended. She was devoted to her family, helpful in times of sickness and trouble, an efficient member of the Dorcas society and a faithful friend. She will be greatly missed by all with whom she was intimately associated. She leaves, besides her husband and children, her mother, who resides in Palmer, four sisters, Mrs. Amelia Learned of Palmer, Mrs. James Jones of Denver, Col., Mrs. Edward D. Cushman and Mrs. Rufus Fay of Monson, and a brother, Homer G. Sedgwick, of Athol. The funeral was held yesterday afternoon. Rev. F. S. Hatch officiated, and Mr. and Mrs. A. D. Norcross sang "One sweetly solemn thought," and "Jesus, as Thou wilt." The bearers were members of the family, Homer G. and Harry G. Sedgwick of Athol, Ira L. Peck of Norwich, Ct., Dr. N. W. Rand, Edward D. Cushman and Rufus Fay. The burial was in the Center cemetery. Mrs. Jones of Denver arrived in time for the funeral.

Death of Mrs. J D. Bradway.

Sophronia M., 68, wife of John Dwight Bradway of district No. 6, died Sunday of pneumonia. She had been in somewhat feeble health for some time. The funeral was held at the house Wednesday. A quartette composed of Mrs. W. A. Squier, Miss Mabel L. Tucker, Rev. W. H. Marble and C. H. Keep sang "Jesus, lover of my soul," and "We shall sleep, but not forever," and Mr. Marble, pastor of the Methodist church, officiated. The burial was in Moulton Hill cemetery. The bearers, members of the family, were O. E. Bradway, C. L. Jewett, William Bradway, C. A. Bradway, F. P. Bradway of Willimantic, Ct., and E. C. Bradway. Mrs. Bradway's maiden name was also Bradway, and she was born December 21, 1827, on Moulton Hill, Monson. She was married to Mr. Bradway about 49 years ago, and united with the Methodist church in 1875. She was a quiet, unassuming woman, and much respected. She leaves, besides her husband, one daughter, Viola, wife of C. L. Jewett, and one son, Omar E. Bradway, who with his wife (Flora Sutcliffe) live at the Bradway homestead.

Horse Racing on the Snow.

The much talked of horse race between "Glammis," 2 22½, and "Dutch Girl, 2 27¾, took place Wednesday. The street was lined with spectators, and the excitement was great. The two horses are considered the fastest trotters on snow in town, and many are of the opinion that the pacers, notwithstanding their fast records, can beat them. The course was from Pendergast's market to the Monson House, a distance of half a mile; best three in five was the rule. The horses got away with but little scoring, and showed much speed. The little mare proved an easy winner, however, in straight heats. The second time up it was intensely interesting; "Glammis" led by a length until within a few rods of the finish, when the mare made a great spurt and beat him out by half a length. It is understood that a match race for 100 bushels of oats has been arranged to take place on the Palmer track as soon as the weather and track is suitable.

A Narrow Escape.

W. A. Needham and William McAuliffe had a close call last Saturday at the "Rock house." A charge of dynamite had been placed in the ground several days before, but had failed to explode. They had removed the cartridge and were digging up the earth with bars when there came an explosion. Mr. Needham was injured about the face, receiving a wound above his eye which bled profusely, and his eyes received enough sand and dynamite to render them very painful. Mr. McAuliffe did not get as much of the stuff in his face, but more about his body and legs. One knee was injured, but not seriously.

The storm of yesterday and last night was very severe, though no serious damage had been reported this morning. An electric light wire broke down near Herbert M. Smith's house, and a horse owned by T. G. Carew received a shock from it which threw him down. Flynt are mentioned as possible candidates.

The St. Cecilia dramatic company of St. Patrick's church presented "The Shaughraun" at Memorial Hall Tuesday evening to a full house. The parts were without exception well taken, and it seemed a pity that Monson had no well equipped stage where the play might have been given. The company secured appropriate scenery, but of course much time was consumed in nailing it in place between the acts. The Monson Orchestral club furnished music.

The war lecture by Rev. J. Pitner at Memorial Hall last Friday evening was much enjoyed. The speaker gave personal recollections of the war, many being of a humorous nature. It is understood that A. A. Gage camp, Sons of Veterans, has secured Mr. Pitner to lecture for them later on. The fifth and last lecture of the course will be given by Prof. Arthur N. Burke Friday evening, April 17, and will be "Alaska and the Yellowstone Park," illustrated by the stereopticon.

She was educated in the public schools of Monson and the seminary at Hamilton, N. Y. After the completion of her education she taught school for 20 years, and then kept house for a brother. She joined the Congregational church at Monson over 70 years ago, and had been an exemplary member ever since. Celebrated His 82d Birthday.

The 82d birthday of Amos Monroe was quietly observed last Friday by calls from townspeople during the day, and by various tokens of remembrance. Although physically feeble all winter, Mr. Monroe has enjoyed the possession of all his faculties and has taken as keen an interest as ever in people and events. It is six years since he retired from the proprietorship of the Brimfield hotel at the close of nearly 40 years of hotel keeping. The Brimfield Hotel, destroyed by fire soon afterwards, will always be associated with Mr. Monroe, whose management did so much to make it the pride of the town as well as a favorite resort for guests. Retirement to private life and advancing age in no degree diminished the cordial feeling and hearty hospitality which have won for "Uncle Amos" hosts of friends scattered far and wide, and in the little village where he is held in affectionate esteem. Conspicuous among these who paid their respects to their venerable townsman on his birthday were a number of citizens who have passed the three-score-and-ten limit, and several who have reached the age of fourscore. Although Mr. Munroe showed no especial fatigue from the effects of the visit, which he most thoroughly enjoyed, he has failed more perceptibly since that time, and for the past few days has been in a very feeble condition.

LEGISLATIVE MATTERS.

BOSTON, March 16, 1896.

The farmers have carried one peint in their contest against the cattle commission, for the committee on agriculture has reported a bill to extend for one year, or to June 1, 1897, the prohibition of the use of tuberculin as a diagnostic agent upon cattle in this state without the consent of the owners. This leaves it possible to use it upon all cattle which are brought from outside the state, and upon such as may be tested by consent of the owners and such as are put into quarantine. The cattle commissioners are exposed this year to the popular fury in two distinct ways. Many farmers of the state object to them on account of their attitude for the cumpulsory use of tuberculin, while the prevalence of several cases of hydrophobia in the eastern part of the state has led to the issue of an order by the commissioners for the muzzling of all dogs within certain boundaries. This latter step has excited the wrath of many people who care more for their dogs than they do for some other people's lives, and the staid Transcript has had wrathful communications aimed at the "obscure state commission" which has dared to interfere for the protection of the public. The fact that these wrathful letters have never before been brought into contact with the cattle commission may be to them sufficient reason for its seeming obscure to them, but it only shows that the world is bigger than they thought, and the fact is that for several years the cattle commission has been anything but obscure. But the state makes progress by all this excitement, and the narrow and selfish people get their eyes opened, if they are wise. If they are otherwise and stand in the way of progress the wheels of fate roll over them and crush them. In any event, they cease to obstruct, and the state goes on.

The state commission to investigate the use of voting machines has reported that the invention is still in its infancy, and that it would not be wise to provide for the use of many such machines at present. There is evidently a belief that voting by machinery is sure to come before long, and that the principles of the Australian ballot act can be attained with far less of objection than can be properly taken to that especially to the long time which is required for the counting of the ballots. It will not be many years before the count will be recorded automatically and all that the clerks will have to do will be to copy off the figures. Then they can be telegraphed promptly on election night and all the returns ought to be received before seven o'clock in the evening, instead of not till nearly morning in some cases, and sometimes not at all.

One of the sharpest liquor contests of the session promises to be over the bill to require all liquor license fees to be turned into the state treasury. The purpose of the friends of the bill, which was petitioned for by Henry H. Faxon, Rev. Alfred Noon, the secretary of the Massachusetts Total Abstinence Society, and others, is to remove the temptation to vote for license which exists from the fact that the fees go into the city or town treasury, and thus reduce the taxes of the municipality. If there were nothing to be gained by voting for license the presumption is that many more towns than now would vote no-license, and perhaps some cities also. Hence there would be so much gain for the temperance cause. The House has the reputation of being pretty strong on the temperance question. There were only three dissenters from the report of the committee—Senator Corbett and Representatives Donovan and Donahue. Consequently there is a good chance that the bill will pass the House at least, and perhaps the Senate. Henry H. Faxon is in high feather over the attitude of the committee, and feels hopeful for the future of the bill. But the committee has reported against a good many other plans for changing the present license law, presented by both sides.

New things are constantly coming up for legislative interference, and issues are brought to the state house which would not have been dreamed of a few years ago. For instance, the question of compelling lights to be used on bicycles. A few years ago the average reader would not have understood the word, but now a plan to compel the use of lights nearly fills the old hall of the House with remonstrants. There was a great deal of interest, too, at the hearing. It was argued on the part of the objectors that bicycles are vehicles, and that it is no more right to compel bicycles to carry lights than it would be for all other vehicles. Furthermore, nine-tenths of the bicycles are used in cities where the streets are lighted and where there is no occasion for using them. But the friends of lights told of the dangers of being run down by those silent horses, and whatever be the action of the Legislature, the two sides may rest assured that the case has been well presented, both for and against.

Extensions of the weekly payment law are pending in the House, having been reported unanimously by the labor committee. One of them provides that the law shall apply to all persons and partnerships engaged in manufacturing who employ more than 25 hands each, and the other says that no persons or corporations which are subject to the weekly payments law shall evade it by means of a private contract with their employes or by any other means. It is probable that there will be opposition to the bill, for some employers will not like to have the privilege of making contracts taken from them. There has been strenuous objection to this law ever since it was enacted, and it was evaded at first materially.

The opposition to a statue of Gen. Butler is beginning to find its voice more distinctly, and there is yet a sentiment in the state which strongly condemns the movement and which will be likely to defeat the appropriation. There is less fear about speaking out than there was, and the newspapers are finding there is popular support for them if they protest against any such honor being paid. Of course it is not pleasant to say ungracious things about one who has passed to his account and cannot reply to his opponents, but, on the other hand, the fact that a man is dead of whom it is possible to say ungracious things truthfully, ought not to be a reason for keeping silent when silence would lead to a gross perversion of the honor given by the state. There are certain things which the people delight to honor, and the expression of honor must exercise a strong influence upon the young and upon those who are ambitious to emulate the example of the departed in public life. Now, if the ambitious find that the state is indifferent to the means by which prominence was obtained and is careless about the conduct of men in the office if they are smart, then there begins at once, for that very reason, a demoralization of the public sentiment which will bring disastrous results to the state.

Legislative politics are beginning to take shape. It is understood that Speaker Meyer will not return for another term, and the possibilities of his successor are being canvassed. Two names are mentioned more than any others, Messrs. Bates of Boston and Lowell of Boston. Speaker Meyer was in Washington on Monday and was not able to be home in time to preside Tuesday. He went to present to a committee of Congress the resolutions of the Massachusetts Legislature in favor of an appropriation for an improvement of Boston harbor. He had Mr. Lowell preside on Monday and Mr. Bates on Tuesday. Each is a good presiding officer, but the most commendation is due to Mr. Bates. He has an especially fine voice for the chair. He is, moreover, a member whose character commands the confidence of the House. Of course Mr. Lowell is of high character; no implication is cast upon him. But the verdict of the House would doubtless be that Mr. Bates is the better qualified man for the speakership. If it shall be the pleasure of the House of 1897 to elect him, provided his constituents wish to return him for a fourth term, then the state will have a man of high character and ability in the chair. He is a Boston lawyer, son of Rev. L. B. Bates, a Methodist minister, and was for a long time in East Boston. LANDON.

News Which is Good News to Women.

It is a fact that our women who suffer from female complaints and are consequently weak, tired, nervous, dragged-out and full of aches and pains, do not have the same opportunity to be cured as do the residents of the great cities where the most successful specialists in female diseases reside. In other words, our women are debarred from seeking a cure by the great and skilled physicians owing to the cost of travel to the large city and the high fee charged by such specialists.

Here, therefore, is a chance for the sick and suffering women of our community which should not be lost. Dr. Greene of 34 Temple Place, Boston, Mass., who has the largest practice in the world and who is without doubt the most successful specialist in curing female complaints, offers to give free consultation by mail to all women suffering from these distressing weaknesses, discharges, pains and irregularities. You have the privilege of consulting Dr. Greene by letter, describing your complaints, and he will, after carefully considering your condition, send a letter fully explaining all your symptoms so plainly that you will understand exactly what ails you. He will also give you advice, based upon his vast experience and wonderful success in treating such cases, as to just what to do to get cured. All this will cost you nothing, and you can thus have consultation with the best-known and acknowledged most successful specialist in the world without leaving home and at no expense whatever. The Doctor is the discoverer of that greatest of all known medicines, Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy, and he has discovered many other most valuable remedies. Write to him now about your case, for this is a chance to get cured which you may never have again.

Must Use The Knife.

Said the Surgeon, but Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy was taken and the Knife Avoided.

The Union and Advertiser of Rochester, N. Y., recently published the following interesting account of how William W. Adams of 127 South avenue, that city, was saved from a painful operation by the use of Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy.

Mr. Adams said: "Three years ago I was taken with kidney disease very badly; at times I was completely prostrated; in fact, was so bad that the day was set for doctors to perform an operation upon me. But I decided I would not submit. I had been put in hot water baths, and, in fact, nearly every means was tried to help me. Upon the day set for the operation I commenced the use of Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy, and from that moment began to gain, and it was not long before I was entirely cured and have had no return of the trouble since. My weight has increased and I never was so well as I am now. I have recommended to many people, for it saved my life."

In speaking to Mrs. Adams, she said, "About a year ago I was in a very feeble state of health, being completely run down. I had doctored considerably, but without permanent relief. One day one of my neighbors advised me to take Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy, which I did. My trouble was dyspepsia, and for a long while I was unable to be about at all; but after taking a few doses I was completely cured, and now enjoy good health."

Hundreds of men and women with that "run down" condition, unable to work, have recovered health and strength through this remarkable remedy. It purifies the blood, stirs the liver and kidneys to a healthy action. In cases of rheumatism, kidney, liver and urinary troubles, it is a well-known specific.

WITHIN AN ACE.

When the gold craze of 1849 was at its height, I was following the life of professional gambler and general crook at D——, one of the largest mining towns of the west. I had fleeced a couple of miners of a snug sum at Round Hole, a small mining camp a few miles north of D——, and had promised to give them a chance to win back their losings.

Their names were Dodson and Mowyer. The former was a little fellow, while his partner was tall and powerfully built, and spoke with a peculiar yet rather pleasant drawl.

Early on the appointed Sunday morning I set out for Round Hole, and when I arrived, stopped at the Big Strike saloon, where I was to meet my two victims. Presently they came riding up to the door and dismounted. As they came in it struck me they acted rather formal. Dodson nodded. Then Mowyer said, in that peculiar drawl of his, "Well, see'n's yer afore us, s'pose ye don't mind takin' somethin' fer luck?" And I joined them at the bar.

Shortly after we were seated at a table, and it was Dodson's deal. The deck we had belonged to the saloon. The night before a desperado had been shot in this same room, and when Dodson picked up his hand he found on one of his cards a fresh blood stain. That was enough for him. I don't think there was anything that wouldn't happen to us, he said, if we used those cards. So we threw down our hands.

Seeing in this a golden opportunity, I quickly produced a deck from my pocket and gave it to Mowyer, as it was his deal next in order. For a moment he hesitated, and then, looking at me from under his shaggy brows, drawled out, "Well, pardner, I s'pose this deck's all right, but see'n's how this ain't no 'make believe' game we're a-goin' to play here direc'ly, I reckon 'twon't do no harm to make sure." So he began carefully to suit them, one by one.

The only mirror Round Hole could boast of was over the bar in the Big Strike saloon, and while he was busy with the cards I noted how plainly you could see his reflection in the glass. Ah! I could make use of that glass later on, for it would tell me whether he had any aces to spoil the effect of those I had in my sleeve, for we were playing poker.

Before we commenced a stranger came in and asked leave to join us, and soon we four were deep in the "game of bluff." Before the first hand had been played I became conscious of Mowyer's eyes following my every move. He was watching me like a cat. And, stealing a glance in the mirror, I saw a big six shooter was lying in his lap. So he was suspicious? Very well; I would risk nothing until big money was at stake.

We played for an hour. Dodson and I were ahead, Mowyer and the stranger were losers, and then the critical moment came—nearly everything on the table was in the pot. Mowyer had bet his last dollar and "called" us. In the excitement I worked in a "cold" ace, at the risk of my life, played it safe and won the pile on a "showdown." If five aces had come out that time, there would have been another tragedy at the Big Strike.

Mowyer was out. I held most of the "dust," but Dodson and the stranger were not ready to quit, so another hand was dealt. It was the stranger's deal. I had noticed he was very light fingered, and as he shuffled the cards I saw him slip one up his sleeve, but I said nothing. I was playing in luck, and after he and Dodson had staked everything I "called" them and won the point fair and square enough this time.

Well, we separated, and I mounted my broncho and started back to D—, $2600 ahead. But I had barely got out of sight of the camp when, looking back over the road, I saw a cloud of dust, with now and then a glimpse of horsemen. When they came nearer, I saw they were headed by Mowyer, and I drew rein. In a moment they had come up and formed a circle around me. Mowyer dismounted, and stepping forward drew his ugly looking six shooter and commanded me to dismount also. He simply said:

"Would ye be so good as to let us see them there same cards again?" The others were grimly silent.

I complied carelessly, with a gambler's nerve—but with a sinking sensation at my heart.

"Now, pardner," he resumed, "we be a-going to count these cards again. If they're all straight, well and good. But if there's one card more'n there ought ter be, ye can say yer prayers. I reckon ye know," he added significantly, "whether there is or not, 'thout us countin'." And he proceeded, layihg each card out by itself on the hot dusty road.

If I had only put that "cold" ace out of the way! I thought now I was as good as "due for."

We were all watching Mowyer. He had come to one ace, and now another—diamonds and spades. Shuffle, shuffle, shuffle, now another—clubs; shuffle, shuffle, every one intently watching. Now only a few cards left, now only seven—six—five. Ah, another, the ace of hearts. A slight murmur through the crowd and then silence again. Slowly now; shuffle, shuffle, five and four gone. Now only three left, now two; so, then, it was the last card in the pack. And now the last card—and it was the deuce of diamonds!

That fifth ace had not been found—and I was the most surprised man in the party. Again we parted, and as I resumed my way it suddenly came to me like a flash—about the stranger at the Big Strike saloon and the card I saw him slip. Yes, I knew now where the fifth ace was.

And as I think it over now it seems, indeed, I was pretty near to death that time—"within an ace of it," one might say.—Claude W. Turner, in Chicago Herald.

CHANGING OUR MOURNING CUSTOMS.

"One of the surest indications that, as a people, we are tearing away from barbaric customs," writes Edward W. Bok in the Ladies' Home Jonrnal, "is found in the changes which, slowly but surely, have come over our mourning customs and funeral emblems. The time is not so far back when the announcement in a funeral notice that 'friends will please omit flowers' was an unheard-of thing. When this first appeared people wondered at it. * * * Now one meets the request in numerous cases, and the effect has been good. 'Gates Ajar' and similar vulgar floral monstrosities are being discarded, and the modest laurel wreath or cross, or sheaf of wheat have in good taste supplanted them. Flowers for the dead are not to be decried so long as they have a meaning or carry a message of tender sympathy to the living, or attest a love, reverence or respect for the dead. But when offered missionless, in profusion, jammed or crammed into every imaginable made-to-order-looking design or device, the custom, (or habit) of thus remembering the dead becomes offensive and is best honored in the breach." Mr. Bok also expresses hearty satisfaction that the day of big funeral corteges is passing, and that the heavy black crape at the home which death has entered has been supplanted by simple unobtrusive wreaths of green or blossoms. With equal gratification he notes that the sight of young children, fairly stifling beneath the heavy folds of mourning, is becoming more and more rare. In this connection he writes: "I never thoroughly understood until recently the depth of affection and the sure, sane judgment which prompted that member of my family, who, when he was dying, asked that his wife and children should refrain from wearing anything which savored of mourning at his passing. It was difficult to do; the heart seemed to prompt otherwise. But it was done, and the wisdom of my father's dying wish has often come home to his survivors when they have seen the custom followed which has made relatives and friends sombre just to look at each other."

GOOD READING.

"Oh, dear! how I hate to come back to this every-day world. Oh, dear! why could I not be born rich and handsome, and have a fate, instead of delving away here," and Maggie Dalling closed her book, "Emeline's Fate," with a sigh. She had spent her whole morning reading it, and had neglected her dishes, just to see how it would "come out," as girls will.

Maggie's dishes lay in the pan, waiting to be washed. The kitchen fire was out, but the work had to be done, and Maggie reluctantly left her seat at the sunny window to do her work. It seemed to Maggie that the dishes were never so greasy, and the water never cooled so quickly, and during all the time she was bemoaning her fate, just because she was plain Maggie Dalling, with a comfortable home and kind parents, and not the beautiful Lady Emeline.

What caused Maggie's discontent?

A book—just a romantic, impossible story, such as often changes the tenor of a girl's whole life, and makes her look down upon the simple home life and the little homely duties that are as heroic in their small way as all the dashing deeds of the pictured people in the books.

Had Maggie given her morning to "Little Women," how different a picture life would present. Dear "Little Women," "Faith Gartney," "Dr. Gilbert's Daughter," and numerous others that would show Maggie the sweets of every-day life.

If girls would give their spare moments to books of that kind they would find the time well spent; and not only that, but unconsciously, perhaps, they would learn to take their lives and make them as fruitful as dear "Joe" and "Meg" and all the others did theirs.

Leave the highly-spiced romantic stories of runaway marriages, impossible heroines and thrilling experiences until you are older, until you have become better acquainted with life; and you will find that the tales which would thrill you in your school days, appear absurd when you compare them with the higher, nobler lessons you learned in the great book of experience.

A Damp Flirtation.

Mr. Gallant—"Oh, miss, can I be of service to you and offer the protection of my umbrella? There's shelter for two."

And now he's "sorry he spoke."—Philadelphia Times.

MENDELSSOHN'S "WEDDING MARCH."

No reference to Mendelssohn's orchestral music can be made without a word on the "Wedding March," the full beauty of which cannot be realized without bearing in mind that it must be taken in connection with the "Midsummer Night's Dream," as the musical expression of that superb boast of Duke Theseus:—

It is the precise expression of the promise of Theseus; a triumphant march for a triumphant wedding; sadly degraded to be the stock accompaniment of every parish church wedding where there is an organ, an instrument on which it is utterly misrepresented. There ought to be a tax on its preformance, with the condition that it should only be preformed by an orchestra. "What! that hackneyed thing?" Yes, reader; it is part of the business of criticism to get behind the hackneydom, and to think of a work as it would sound to us if we heard it fresh. The "Wedding March" is one of the noblest marches ever written; and the coda, where the wedding joy seems at last to thrill the whole air in the pulsation of those long chains of shakes, is a stroke of real genius; never was there a happier applicatfon of a good, thorough old-fashioned, form of musical ornament. Indeed, I should feel sorry for any man, even now, whose pulse did not beat quicker at a good performance of this march by a first-class orchestra. It has not become old to the present deponent at all events.—Fortnightly Review.

Madge—"Mabel's $200 box of silk hosiery just arrived from Paris yesterday." Estelle (cynically)—"Ah! She'll be seeing mice everywhere now for a month, won't she?"—New York World.

He Was Waked Up Too Soon.

It ain't helfy to woke little boys up so quick.
Dey forgets w'ere dey is, when you do,
'Cause deys sand in deir eyes, an' de winkers will stick,
An' their thinkers is tangled up, too.
An' the place w'ere dey cuddles in bed is so wom,
An' de pillers so comfy an' sof',
'At I don't fink it's right for nobody to come
An' des pull de comforters off.

An' my pants won't come on, an' de worter's mos' froze,
An' de towel's all starchy an' slick;
An' the oil-clof's so cold 'at it frewzes my toes,
It's enough to make little boys sick.
An' you des might a-leff me alone for awhile,
Till you heard dat dere bekfuss bell wing,
'Cause I des' was curled up in the comflest pile,
An' dweamed in a dweam it was spring.

Dere was cwoousses bloomin' along by de walks,
Punchin' little round holes in de leaves
W'ere dey comed pokin' frew on deir little green stalks,
Like a little boy's han's frew his sleeves.
Honey bees were a-buzzin' aroun' eve'yw'ere,
An' de peach t'ee was all over pink,
An' it smiled des' so sof' and so sweet in de air
'At I des was too happy to fink.

An' de little w'ite clouds des' went floatin' along,
An' de day was so pitty an' still
I could hear some one way off a-singin' a song,
An' de cow bells clink on de hill.
An' de little bwook twinkled over the stones,
An' de bubbles went dancin' down stweam,
An' den—you forgetted to le' me alone,
An' it all was des' only a dweam.

OFTEN the woman who spends little money on her clothes is better dressed than one who spends much, because she knows the secret of securing stylish effects by putting careful thought into the small details of dress.

A bit of stiffening goes into every lapel, pocket flap, hem, and wherever a flat smooth result is desired, and she selects an interlining which will retain its shape and stiffening until the dress is worn out.

A Robin.

What art thou doing there,
Robin, sweet Robin,
On yonder bough so bare,
Singing or sobbing?

Through the long summer days
Heard wert thou rarely;
Lark, thrush and nightingale
Outsung thee fairly.

Now, when lark, thrush and all
Silence are keeping,
Skies like a leaden pall,
Mist undercreeping,

Where the dark yew its shade
Over churchyards is flinging,
Thou sittest and singest.
Oh, what art thou singing?

It is not of love;
Love needs one to hear it.
It is not of life;
Death and tombs are too near it.

And it is not in hope,
With the long days before us,
With the limitless scope,
And the woods sweet in chorus.

But when all else is still,
Or winds only are sighing,
Leaves falling around thee
Decaying and dying,

When some fire yet unknown
In thy warm heart is throbbing,
Thou sittest and singest there,
Robin, sweet Robin!

Gay of heart, cheerily,
Chiding our sadness;
But, oh, there are tears in thee,
Bird, in thy gladness.

PALMER HISTORY GLEANINGS.

BY O. P. ALLEN.

XI

Hostelries of Later Years.

The advent of the railroad and the growth of new villages in our town wrought many changes. The old-time taverns were either torn down or relegated to do service as farmhouses; a few of them are still used in that honorable capacity. The changed conditions of modern times and ideas caused new hotels to spring up in our town, as in many others, to meet the growing needs of a progressive age.

The Western Railroad Hotel.

Capt. E. N. Dewey came to Palmer from Becket in 1836 and bought the Capt. Daniel King farm, which comprised the land from where the Baptist church stands to Dublin street, and from the river to Tamar Hill, or Dewey Hill, as it is now called. The old farmhouse stood where Mrs. Laura Child now resides. The front part of this house was a two-story structure which the Captain moved to the site of the present Weeks House in 1839, making some changes and additions, and called it the Western Railroad Hotel, in honor of the road just opened from Boston to Springfield. Some three years after he built the Dewey homestead, where he resided during the remainder of his life. The hotel proved a success from the first, but the Captain preferred a more quiet life, so he sold the property to Ephraim and Lambert Allen in 1843. It was about this time that Lambert Allen built the brick house where C. E. Fish now resides. In 1845 the Western Railroad bought out the Allen brothers, which purchase included the hotel and brick house. The company sold the hotel to Elisha Converse, and exchanged the brick house for the old Watson house and some land, moving the Watson house to its present location near the hat factory. The hotel now came under the management of John Morrell and John Converse, who changed the name to "Union." In a short time Morrell sold his interest to P. W. Webster, Mr. Converse remaining. During the following years the hotel changed managers quite often, Converse and Webster giving place to John Allen, who was followed by Thomas Marshall, William Wallace, and Calvin Shaw. E. Boardman Shaw, the next proprietor, bought the property of Elisha Converse, enlarged the capacity of the house and changed its name to "Antique," which cognomen it bore for many years. Mr. Shaw "knew how to keep a hotel," and the house flourished under his charge. After his death it was continued under the management of John Shaw and Mrs. Tiffany. In 1873 the house was bought by J. W. Weeks. In succeeding years Mr. Weeks made many changes, and later gave it his own name, besides adding a third story, rendering the house attractive and imposing. Under his care the house became popular and widely known. Noted people were counted among his patrons, and the magnates of the Boston and Albany Railroad Co. were frequent guests. Coaching and driving parties often sought his hospitality and rejoiced in the bountiful repasts spread for their enjoyment.

But the end of this prosperous house came suddenly. On the morning of Aug 3, 1891, the house was discovered to be on fire, and so rapid was the progress of the flames that the guests had barely time to escape with their lives, save one, Rev. F. F. Williams, who perished before he could escape. The destruction of the house was a great loss to Mr. Weeks and to the village. Undeterred by misfortune, Mr. Weeks soon set out clearing away the rubbish preparatory to rebuilding, so that in January, 1892, he reopened a new house on the site of the former one, much smaller, but neatly arranged for a limited number of guests. He soon accepted a position in Springfield, since which time the house has been under the care first of Mr. Fillmore, and later of Mr. Fuller.

The Tockwotton House.

Encouraged by the promising future of the new Depot village, Elisha Converse, who had recently removed from the Old Centre, built a hotel on the site of the present Converse House. There was quite a rivalry between him and Capt. Dewey to see who would open first, so it happened that each was ready for business about the same time in 1839. The house was a two-story wooden building, with a large hall extending in the rear over a shed. The entire house was devoted to hotel purposes, there being no accommodations for stores. It was under the successful management of Elisha and John Converse until it was destroyed by the disastrous fire of April 17, 1851. Not discouraged, Mr. Converse soon erected a larger and more substantial house in brick of three stories, with a portion of the ground floor for stores, and a large hall in the second story. Many names were suggested for the new hotel, but the one which was finally adopted was "Tockwotton House," from the Indian name of a river near Providence, R. I. The new house was opened under the management of Elisha and J. M. Converse with the most elaborate ball and supper ever given in Palmer. Amos Mason was the caterer, and outdid himself in the variety and taste with which he served the guests. The supper would have satisfied Parisian epicures. One hundred twenty couples sat down to supper. Through the kindness of Mrs. J. M. Converse, who has preserved a copy of the menu of the occasion, I am enabled to give it in full, in order that the reader may see what a task the guests had to decide the important question of what to eat:

John Converse had charge of the house till 1853, when he was followed by Thomas Norris, with J. W. Weeks for clerk. Charles D. Foster kept the house during 1855-6, followed by Webster and Rich, who gave place to N. B. Royce in 1867 and he to J. S. Wood in 1871, when the name Tockwotton was discarded for the "American House." When Milton Turner came, about 1875, he reverted to the original name "Palmer." He was followed by Seth Stone, Mr. Smith and C. P. Stone, who again changed the name, this time to "Converse," which cognomen it has since borne. P. S. Sawyer came next, and after his retirement the house was remodeled and a fourth story added at a cost of $9000, thus largely increasing the capacity of the house for the accommodation of guests. Mr. Fillmore was the next landlord, but remained only a short time. The present proprietor, E. R. Pierce, came in 1891, and has since managed the house with the exception of one year, when he was absent in Europe, it was in the charge of Lord and Fitzpatrick. Under the present management the Converse House has become widely known to traveling men, by whom it is well patronized. This sketch would be incomplete without mentioning the fact that James F. Fenton has retained his position as clerk for more than ten years through varied administrations because of his uniform, pleasant attention to the needs of the guests.

Nassowanno House.

This house was named in memory of an Indian chieftain, Nassowanno, friend and ally of Annogomok, one time sachem of the territory embraced by the present towns of Palmer and Ware, and who, as the attorney of his friend, bargained the territory to the whites in 1686. Nassowanno was the son of Nashoonon, a Nipmuk chief who accepted Christianity and had his residence near Magus Hill in Worcester county. Nassowanno was an ally of Philip, but after his defeat was friendly to the whites, and often came with his followers to this section in the season of fishing and corn planting. The first Nassowanno House was built in 1850 by Darius and Calvin M. Shaw. It was a three-story substantial brick building with wood cornices, and covered the space occupied by the present house. The first floor was fitted for stores. This hotel was also burned in the great fire of April 17th, 1851, with a loss to the owners of $30,000.

At the urgent request of many citizens Chester and Harvey Strong undertook the task of rebuilding the house, which was finished in 1852, and still remains as a monument of their courage. At the time of its erection it was considered the most imposing brick hotel in Western Massachusetts, being four stories high, with ornamental facings. When finished and fully furnished it cost about $33,000. The second Nassowanno was opened to the public Monday night, October 11, 1852, by the proprietor, E. B. Shaw, who gave a grand supper to 150 invited guests. One paper which gave a description of the house at the time said it was furnished equally as well as the Massasoit in Springfield, and had accommodations for one hundred guests. The hall in the fourth story was a notable feature, 25x60 feet, ornamented at one end by a life-size portrait of Nassowanno. The five stores on the first floor were occupied in order, John Bowles, news, boots and shoes; C. M. Garfield, hats and furs; Chester Strong, groceries; L. A. Baily, tailor; Mr. and Mrs. F. O. Brooks, jewelry and millinery.

The house was formally dedicated by a ball December 11, 1852, Germinder's band from Hartford furnishing the music. It must have been a brilliant occasion, judging from the following poetry written to commemorate the event:

"There was a sound of revelry by night.
And Nassowanno's Hall had gathered then,
A crowd of gallantry and beauty—and bright
The lamps shone o'er fair women and brave men;
A hundred hearts beat rapidly, and when
Music rose with its voluptuous swell
Soft eyes looked love to eyes that spake again,
And all went merry as a marriage bell.
But hush! hark! a deep sound strikes like a rising knell!
Did ye not hear it? No! 'twas but the wind,
Or the car rattling on the frozen street;
On with the dance! let joy be unconfined,
No sleep till morn when youth and pleasure meet
To chase the glowing hours with flying feet.
But hark! that pealing sound breaks in once more,
The hall its thrilling echos doth repeat,
And nearer, clearer, than before,
It comes—What is the matter, tell!
'Tis Boardman, ringing loud the supper bell."

So well had the projectors looked after the details of the building that no repairs were deemed necessary till 1886, when the house underwent a thorough renovation at a cost of about $10,000, making it an up-to-date hotel in all its appointments. In 1883 Lucia E. Strong and Homer C. Strong built the block east of the hotel and connected the two together, thus adding many rooms for the use of guests. This hostelry has been a deservedly popular one since it was opened to the public, having been under the charge of many successful managers. The following gentlemen have been proprietors since 1853, in order: E. B. Shaw, Chester Strong, M. Olmstead, John Allen, J. W. Weeks, S. Taft, C. P. Stone, Thomas Mattoon, H. C. Strong, Payne & Belcher, M. E. Haradon, P. C. Sawyer, H. B. Otis and M. D. Sullivan.

Hotels in Three Rivers.

Pliney Cooley converted the original house of H. J. Kelley into the first tavern kept in Three Rivers. Probably this house first belonged to the original Three Rivers company, and was opened about 1830 by Cooley, who was followed by John and Ephraim Allen, and later by a man by the name of Smith from Canada, who was a relative of the Pauls. It is said that Smith sold the house to Abel Calkins in 1837, who had the charge of it until 1843, when he sold it to Dr. Davis, who owned it until his death in 1869. It was then bought by the Otis Co. After Mr. Calkins the house was successively in charge of Freeman Smith, Marshall Fox, Merrick Cooley, Mr. Spaulding, Andrew Holt in 1855-6, John Sherman, and Mr. Bullock in 1859. In 1872 it was kept as a boarding house by Jesse Buffington, when it was destroyed by fire. In 1880 John Rivers built the Riverside Hotel, which was subsequently bought by Mrs. Mary Hanley, who still continues it.

Bondsville Hotels.

Emilius Bond opened a hotel in Bondsville about 1830 in a one-story red house located where the meat market now stands. It had at first a yellow pumpkin for a sign, and when that decayed a wooden imitation painted to represent the natural fruit was put in its place; probably to convey the idea to the public that though the house was small, yet "it was some pumpkins." This hotel was kept by Abijah Hyde, who was succeeded in 1835 by Capt. Murdock and later by Mr. Orcutt. This house was taken down in 1840. The second hotel was built by Emilius Bond about 1850. It was a two-story building and kept at first by Seth Stimson, followed by Mr. Miller, and last by Mr. Canterbury. It was discontinued as a hotel soon after 1860, since which time no hotel has been sustained on the Palmer side of the river.

Hotels in Thorndike.

The Thorndike Company built the first hotel there about 1844. It was located just north of the present Congregational church. It was first under the care of Andrew Breard, who remained about eight years and was followed by Mr. Hoar, Elias Paul, Stephen G. Newton, Charles D. Foster and others. Mr. Foster was in charge in 1852 and furnished the dinner for the 100th anniversary of this town, held at Four Corners July 5th that year. The house is now a boarding house. For about thirty years the mill operatives observed the 22d day of March each year with a dance at this house, which was known as the "blowing out night," because the mills discontinued the use of lights after that date until the succeeding autumn. In 1885 the Clinton House was built and opened as a public house by Mrs. Clifford, and is still managed by her.

The outline history of our public houses has been given in the foregoing sketches, covering a period of 163 years. Few country towns in our state are able to boast so many historic inns, around which clustered so much of the life of a community during the Colonial and Revolutionary times. All of our innholders of the last century were leading men of the town, whose rooms were always open for those who desired to council together for the best methods of carrying forward the town's part in national affairs. Our people were always patriotic and equal to every emergency, and it would be interesting to be able to give the inside history of the times and the men who figured then, and to unfold their councils matured under the hospitable roofs of the Scotts, the Thompsons, the Quintons, the Kings and Walkers of those days. It would add much to our knowledge of many noted men outside our own borders, and read like a chapter of romance. But, alas! oblivion has closed over nearly all save what the scanty records of public meetings disclose, leaving us to let imagination supply the lack of better knowledge.

Applies to Each.

"Nor how strong minded he can be till his wife asks him for one."—Life.

ENGLISH AS SHE MIGHT BE SPOKE.

A Hindu pleader in British India, who had evidently learned his English with the misleading help of a book of synonyms, besides a dictionary, amazed a local magistrate, says London Law Notes, with this extraordinary tangle of metaphors: "My learned friend, with mere wind from a teapot, thinks to browbeat me from my legs. But this is mere gorilla warfare. I stand under the shoes of my client, and only seek to place my bone of contention clearly in your honor's eye. My learned friend vainly runs amuck upon the sheet anchors of my case. Your honor will be pleased enough to observe that my client is a widow, a poor chap with one post-mortem son. A widow of this country, your honor will be pleased enough to observe, is not like a widow of your honor's country. A widow of this country is not able to eat more than one meal a day, or to wear clean clothes, or to look after a man. So my poor client had not such physic or mind as to be able to assault the lusty complainant. Yet she has been deprived of some of her more valuable leather, the leather of her nose. My learned friend has thrown only an argument ad hominy upon my teeth, that my client's witnesses are all her relation. But they are not near relations. Their relationship is only homeopathic. So the misty arguments of my learned friend will not hold water. At least they will not hold good water. Then, my learned friend has said that there is on the side of his client a respectable witness, namely, a pleader, and since this witness is independent so he should be believed. But your honor, with your honor's vast experience, is pleased enough to observe that truthfulness is not so plentiful as blackberries in this country. And I am sorry to say, though this witness is a man of my own feathers, that there are in my profession black sheep of every complexion, and some of them do not always speak gospel truth. Until the witness explains what has become of my client's nose leather he cannot be believed. He cannot be allowed to raise a castle in the air by beating upon a bush. So, trusting in that administration of British justice on which the sun never sets, I close my case."

KNEW WHAT SHE WANTED.—"My husband asked me to stop and get him a piece of sacred music," said the lady, entering the music store; "it's something about hands, but I can't for the life of me think what it is." "'The Folded Hands,' perhaps," said the clerk. "No, that's not it." "'Those Beautiful, Beautiful Hands?'" ventured the attendant a second time. "No, that doesn't sound like it." "It can't be 'The Palms,'" was the third suggestion made by the clerk. "That's it, 'The Palms,'" said the little woman triumphantly. "I knew it had something to do with the hands!"—Yonkers Statesman.

Bacteriology.

Introduction.—Bacteriology as a science is comparatively new and has opened a limitless field for investigation. It is a science, a knowledge of which is valuable to every housekeeper. It is the purpose of the writer in this and following short articles to give general information on such branches of the science as are of special interest to housekeepers. These papers will not go into minute details, and will present the subject as simplified as possible. They will be abstracts and compilations from scientific works of value, from lectures, and from personal conversations with scientists. I shall attempt nothing original, but shall quote freely when a quotation expresses briefly and clearly the point I wish to make; and I shall pick out sentences here and there from my authorities as it suits my purpose.

Terms.—In this connection we notice the terms microbe and its plural, microbes, bacterium, bacteria, bacillus, bacilli, and germs. To explain fully the uses of these terms would require a history of the science. I intend to give a brief outline of that later. For the present let me say that the term germ, which comes from a Latin word meaning "to produce," was given to microbes before their nature was understood; it is much used, but is inappropriate and disapproved by many careful scientists. Let me give a few definitions. "An organism is a structure performing functions." (Webster.) Micros is the Greek word small. A microscope is an instrument for seeing small things, and a microbe is a small organism. Hence "a microbe is any microscopic organism." Bacillus and bacterium are Greek words; their plurals are bacilli and bacteria; they both mean a "staff." These terms have long been used in botany and zoölogy to describe rod-like filaments. They referred originally to the shape of the microbe, and were used and are now sometimes used synonomously. Yet careful writers make a distinction, using the term bacteria to describe microscopic organisms in general, and the term bacilli to describe a certain form of bacteria. For our present purpose the general terms bacterium and bacteria will best serve us.

All forms of bacteria are classified as plants; they are invisible except under a microscope, but they are innumerable. "There are no other living things in nature, from the highest to the lowest, so widely distributed in the earth, the air and the water, so common, so multitudinously present, near us and in us, as the various kinds" of bacteria.

Forms.—Whole volumes have been written on the forms of bacteria, but in general it may be said "in shape they show three varieties: Rod-like, called bacilli; spherical, called cocci; and cork-shaped, called spirilli."

Color.—"As a rule bacteria are white, so when numerous in water the fluid is milky. But of numerous species each has its peculiar color, as red, blue, yellow or green."

Structure.—"Bacteria, like other living things, are composed of cells," that is, each individual bacterium is a single cell. The wall of the cell or the outer membrane is cellulose, the substance "forming the framework of all plant structures." The inner soft substance of the cell is protoplasm, which is even more common in higher organisms than cellulose. Cell comes from a Latin word which means to hide, and was used because the cell hides what is within, in this case protoplasm. Protoplasm is from two Greek words which mean first, or beginning, and to find, so called because the substance protoplasm is the beginning substance of all living beings, for all plants and all animals are made up of tissues and these tissues are formed by the union of innumerable cells. Therein the bacteria resemble other living things except that each bacterium contains but one cell, while the organism that we see contains a great, great many.

New Fashions.

A few large hats are shown already in the wholesale houses for summer wear. Nearly all large hats have Tam O'Shanta crowns made of fancy braids, the brims being leghorn or plain straws with fancy edge.

A new style cuff turns back in curved curved sections and reminds one of a lily.

There is a new pattern just out for a skirt. It is for narrow goods. It has nine gores, and is five and a half yards around the bottom.

Walking shoes will have rounded toes, but broad, to fit the foot. House shoes are still to be "toothpicks," in patent leather, also in red, white, blue, and russet leather.

Large sleeves still obtain, reports to the contrary notwithstanding.

In Season.

Planting.—Now is the time to get celery and lettuce seeds planted in boxes. Pansy, nasturtium and other flower seeds also. Look over the seed packages in market, they will tell you what to plant now.

Shopping.—If you haven't bought your yearly supply of table linen do it soon, the rise in prices has already set in. Hamburgs are handsomer and cheaper now than they will be later.

Fashions.—The first openings of new cotton goods are in March. The best assortment of summer silks you will find now; all the new spring styles. How beautiful, how gay are the Persian colors. But you need not be gay to be stylish if your tastes are quiet. There are beautiful silks of various makes with prices varying from sixty-nine cents to four dollars a yard, that have the new Persian colors so harmonized that the effect is pleasing to the most modest taste. Silk waists with large sleeves will be as much worn as ever. Shirt waists show greater varieties. Besides the severe styles there are waists of dainty muslins and lawns, with frills and laces and insertions.

FLORAL DECORATIONS FOR CHILDREN'S PARTIES.—In giving a birthday party for children the table should be decorated with the birthday flower of the month in which they were born: January, snowdrop; February, primrose; March, violet; April, daisy; May, hawthorn; June, wild rose; July, lily; August, poppy; September, convolvulus; October, hops; November, chrysanthemum; December, holly. Each has an appropriate sentiment attached to it. The snowdrop means consolation; the primrose, youthful sunshine; the violet, modesty; the daisy, innocence; the hawthorn, hope; the wild rose, simplicity; the lily, purity; the poppy, the comfort of sleep; the convolvulus, contentment; hops, aspiration; the chrysanthemum, cheerfulness; holly, foresight and protection.—Ladies' Home Journal.

IN CUPID'S SCRAP BOOK.—Probably a woman would be a bride to her husband longer if she would continue making company of him. Most women begin to save their jam for visitors when they have been married three months.

OFTEN the woman who spends little money on her clothes is better dressed than one who spends much, because she knows the secret of securing stylish effects by putting careful thought into the small details of dress.

A bit of stiffening goes into every lapel, pocket flap, hem, and wherever a flat smooth result is desired, and she selects an interlining which will retain its shape and stiffening until the dress is worn out.

Sponge Crépon

does this to perfection, as it never crushes nor allows the dress fabric to wrinkle nor become limp. It comes in three weights and is suited to the thinnest evening fabric as well as to heavy cloth gowns. Being interwoven it prevents the heaviest goods from pulling out of shape and as it is thoroughly waterproofed it is the ideal interlining for Fall and Winter wear.
